Vol. 69.

PUBLICATION OFFICE No. 136 BANBON ST.

PHILADELPHIA, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 1890.

PIVE CENTS A COPY.

No. 31

PROM AFAR.

BT A. U. W.

tio thou thy way. I do not seek to share
The path which God hath girt with flowers for thee,
It lies before thee wrapped in sunshine fair,
To know thee happy is enough for me.

If thou art safe, and sheltered in the ark Of blessed home from earthly stress and strife, It is enough for me, far off, to mark God's smile, and love's, complete thy noble life.

It is enough for me to see thee share Life's bas quet with thy dearest, crowned with nowers; No sign of mine shall yex the seested sir, No tear of mine shall mar thy happy hours.

HEART AND RING

BY THE AUTHOR OF "MULL AND VOID." "MADAM'S WARD," "THE BOUSE IN

> THE CLOSE," (WHITE BERRIES AND RED," "ONLY ORE LOYE," MTC., ETC.

> > CHAPTER XXIX.

E thought of her beauty; he recalled her noble generosity to him. Why, she had only come to his aid when he was in mortal straits, but she had done so at the risk of her social reputation! Surely, if he must marry someone, it must be Lady Grace.

He might also have reminded himself that by so doing he would win his uncle's the marquis's-favor; but, to do Lord Cecil oredit, he did not think of that, he only remembered Lady Grace's goodness to him.

He reached London at noon, had a bath and allowed his valet to clothe him in the regulation morning attire, and went straight to the Peyton's house.

The footman told him that Lady Grace was out, riding in the Park.

"I'll wait," said Lord Cecil, and he went into the drawing room.

He paced up and down the Turkey car-pet, looking out of the window, and staring at the ornaments on the mantel-shelt. Among them was one of the fashionable cabinet photograph frames, with the portrait covered by a curtain. In absence of mind he drew the curtain seide, and saw a portrait of himself.

With a sudden flush he left it fall, as the door opened, and Lady Grace entered.

which set off her perfectly-graceful figure to its very best advantage.

As she entered, her mature and majestic loveliness struck him fully for the first time, and he remembered with a sudden vividness the words of one of the young fellows at the Norwegian inn. Yes, she was one of the loveliest of society women!

She started perceptibly at sight of him, so much so that she dropped her whip. He sprang forward and picked it up for her, and by the time be had given it ber-ten moments though the action required—she had recovered bersetf.

"Back so soon?" whe said, giving him her hand, small, and white, and warm. This is a surprise! Don't the mimon bite. or rme, or whatever you call it? Or has it rained all the time, and have you been bored to death? I'm afraid you'll be bored just as much in London, for everyone is leaving."

"The salmon were all right," he said, still holding her hand. "I came back because I wanted to see you!"

"To see me?" she said, her eyes flauhing into his for a moment, and then drooping. Well, you were just in time, for paps and I were off to the Continent."

"Then I have just come in time," he said. "Let me give you some tea; sit down," she said, and gently tried to withdraw her hand, but he held it firmly.

"Never mind the tea, Lady Grace," he said, with something of his old light-heartedness. "You shall give me—or refuse me -a cup after you have heard what I have to my."

"And what have you to say that is more important than tes?" she retorted, in a light tone, which was belied by the quiver on her lips,

"I have come to ask you to be my wife," he said quietly.

She put her left hand to her bosom, and her beautiful eyes dilated. If joy always killed, then Lady Grace would have fallen dead at Cecil Neville's feet that moment; but it is sorrow, not joy, that kills, and instead of failing she teant towards him with a tremuious sigh. It was almost too good to be believed! Spencer Churchill had told her that it would come, but she had always doubted it; and new-it had come! He was here. Herel-he, whom she and grown to love-the man for whom she had plotted and risked so much, even her social good name-was bers!

It was a proud, an ecstatic moment; no wonder she protonged it.

"What do you say?" he saked, still hold ing her hand, his grave voice as much unlike an ardent lover's as it is possible to imagine: and yet it was like music to her! "I know I am no ot worthy to win so great a prise, but I will do my best to make you

"And- and you love me?" she asked, It was a dangerous question, but she was a woman and longed to hear the magic words which every woman loves to hear from the lips of the man she loves.

He paused imperceptibly. "Who could do anything but love you, dear Gracel" he replied. "Wili you be my wife? I will try and make you happy, indeed I will What do you say?" Her soft, warm fingers closed on his, and she leant towards him involuntarily. "If you are sure-" she murmuredyou are sure you want me to say 'yes

"Indeed I do!" he responded. "I have come all the way from Norway in the hope that you would."

"Then I will say-'yes!" " she breathed; and her head sank upon his breast, "You will be good to me-Oeail?"

"I will be good to you," he responded, and he put his arm round her and kissed her in lover-wise, but not-sh, not!-with upon the lips, and eyes, and hair of Doris Marlowel

The news spread, as such news will, and in a day or two all London knew, through the gossip-mongers and the society papers, that Lord Occil Neville, the heir to the marquisate of Stoyle, had proposed to Lady

"So that there was something in that story of her going to his rooms, you see!" envious mothers whispered behind their

And the following morning Cecil Neville received a short message from the marquis, who was staying at the house in Grosvenor Square, requesting that Cooli would come and see him.

Cocil went, and found his lordship seated by the window of his own room, looking at the passers-by as if he were a judge just donning the black cap. His thin lips drew together with a smile that was more like a sneer as he gave Cooli a couple of cold was his amiable greeting. Lord Coul smiled rather grimly,

"So you've come to your senses at last?"

"I suppose you allude to my engagement to Lady Grace, sir?" he said. "I was coming to call on you when your message bed me.

"Ah! Well, I congratulate you, and I wish her every happiness," remarked the marquis by way of a blessing, and his tone said quite plainly, "But I don't think she'll get it."

"Thank you, sir," said Lord Cecil.

"Yes, I think you are a confoundedly lucky fellow," continued the marquis, especially as you nearly got into the worst mess a man can get into. I suppose that affair turned out as I expected? The wench jilted you-oh, I don't want to know any particulars, they wouldn't interest mer but I may be permitted to express a hope that you have completely washed your hands of the whole affair, and that if the girl turns up again, there will be no nonsense. Grace is far too good for you, and very much too good for any trick of that kind.

Lord Cedi bit his lip and frowned. "If I understand you, my lord-" Then he stopped. "No, sir, we won't quarrel to-day. As you say, that—that affair isover and done with, and if Miss Mariows were to come back, I promise that I will not, as you delicately suggest, desert Lady Grace for ber."

"Yes, that's what I hinted," said the marquis coolly. "I'm giad to hear there's no danger of it. Men are such fools young ones especially-that one never

"I may be a fool, but I'm not a black guard!" said Occii, almost beside himself. "I hope not," amented the marquis de-liberately, "and now I suppose you mean to have the marriage quickly?"

"That rests entirely with Lady Grace," said Lord Oscil.

"Of course, I hate long engagements; besides I've an abourd fancy for seeing her married before I die. Not that I think of dying just yet, you'll be sorry to hear. Better get the affair settled speedily. You can live in one of the places in the country: I didn't care where it is so long as you don't expect me to come and live with you," and be smiled sardonically.

Lord Codi remained stient,

"You'd better take the Barton place. hate it; but I nate all of them, so that is not much of a reason."

"Barton is too large, is it not, sir?" said Lord Oscil.

"That's my business," retorted his lordship, with something like a snart. "I don't mean you to be a pauper; or to live with a couple of servants and on bread and cheese. You have done as I wished you to do, h not until you were and he smiled significantly; "and I will do what is requisite in the way of money-for her sake."

"Thank you, my lord-for her sake," said Lord Cecil grimly.

"Yes. Why doesn't she come and see me? Tell her to do so, if you please." He was stient a moment as Lord Castl bowed. then he added, "The affair is making some stir, I suppose. I'm thinking whether I can summon up courage to give a partyin honor of the event."

"Pray don't take so much trouble, sir,"

"Yes, I suppose I must," continued the marquis, as if Cecil had not spoken, "It is the usual thing, and she will look for it."

"I don't think Lady Grace expects-" "You know very little of what Lady Grace expects," he interrupted, with cold contempt. "Tell her to come to me. Wait a moment, piesse," he added, as Lord Cecti was making his escape. "I am going to send her a present; that also is due to her. I suppose you have been able to afford her a thirty shitting ring?"

"I gave rather more than that, sir," repiled Lord Codi with a smile.

"Ah; go to that sale, if you please, and bring me one or two of the jewel-cases. I will send her something now. Here are the keys,-nothey are in that drawer," and ne pointed to the small writing cabinet which always accompanied him, and handad Lord Cacil a small key.

Lord Cectl unlooked the cabinet, got the keys, and was crossing the room to the safe, when the door opened.

"What the dence do you mean by coming in without knocking, sir?" exclaimed the marquis; then, as he saw who it was, he eald in a softer voice. "Oh, it's you, Spencer, is it? You've come in time to hear the news and congratulate the bridegroom,

"Which I do, with all my heart, my dear Cooli," murmured Spencer Churchill, taking Lord Cecil's hand in both of his and pressing it affectionately, while he beamed benedictory smile all over him, "With all my heart! I can't tell you, my dear marquis, how rejoiced I was to hear the news. Dear Lady Gracel So beautiful and so good! You are indeed a happy man, Cectif May every good gift which Heaven has to bestow-

"That will do," broke in the marquis with a encer; "we'll take the rest as read, if you don't mind. I've told Cecil that I will give a party, to mark my sense of his

"A party? Excellent!-admirable!" exclaumed Spencer Churchill, rubbing his hands, his eyes going from the marquis's cold, sardonio face to Lord Cacil's grave and rather moody one with keen watchfulnem. "Now, how good of you to think of that! Why, Low many years is it since you entertained in this house?" The marquis compressed his lips,

"The last time was"—he paused a moment, then, as if out of sheer bravado, went on-"the night before my wife ran away from me! Not a pleasant omen for dear Cecil,' in 117"

Spencer Churchill coughed behind his

"Ob, there must be no bad omeus for the young couple," he said rather confusedly. "And what date is the party to be?"

"When you like," replied the marquis, with the most profound indifference. "I should enjoy it better if you'd wait until I'm dead, but se it is, I don't care when it

"Ah! then we must leave it to dear Lady Grace," anid Spencer Churchill.

"I'm sending her a present," said the marquis listicasty. "There are some things in that safe there; get them out, and choose "Now how delightful," purred Spencer

Churchill. "One of the old family jewels, eh, dear marquis? A bracelet, or a ring, or something of that kind, I suppose?" By this time Lord Cecil had reached the safe and opened it, and Spencer Churchill, with a smile of childlike interest and curlogity, went and stood beside him.

The safe was haif full of papers, and nothing but papers, as it appeared, and Lord Occil had said so, and waited for instructions.

"The cases are at the back," said the marquis, "For Heaven's sake don't bother me over the business, or I shall regret my andden and unusual generosity," he added, with a sneer.

Lord Cecil took some of the documents out, and revealed a couple of lewel cases and placing the former on a chair, carried the letter to the marquis.

"These papers want arranging, dear marquis," said Spencer Churchill, and he iingered behind as if casually, but his eyes fisched over the litter of parchment with keen and searching scrutiny.

"I daressy," assented the marquis indifferently. "There are some wills of mine there, I think, but it doesn't matter. I shall live to make two or three more to add to this collection," and he glanced at Lord Neville maliciously.

Spencer Churchill laughed, as if it were an excellent joke, and Lord Cocil opened the cases and set them on the small tablet beside the marquis.

"Are these what you want?" he saked. "Yer, I suppose so," said his lerdship, Choose comethings here, Churchill."

"Am I to help in the selection? Bealiy!" he exclaimed, and leaned forward with such alsority that he overinged the chair upon which the deeds were lying, and soat tered them on the floor.

"Oh, I are so norry! Tut, tut, how clumay of mel" he exclaimed apologetically, and he went down on his knees and gathered up the papers.

"Let them alone, for Heaven's cake!" encered the marquis, with cold irritation.

"Yes, yes, I'll just pick them up," murmured Spenser Churchill, and with his back to the other two, he rapidly examined each deed as he placed it on a chair. "Now, then," and he came to the table. "Ah! these are some of the Stoyle jewels! How exquisite they are, and what a pity they should have been hidden away so long! How nice it is to reflect that they will soon adorn our beautiful Lady Grace, eh, dear

Lord Cecil did not answer, but moodily took the jewels from their respective cases and held them up for the marquis's inspec

He eyed them with his usual cold impas sibility, but presently Lord Cedi held up a suite of pearls. It was an antique and evidently priceiess set, and Cecii was regarding them with a listiess interest when suddenly a strange idea flashed across his mind that he had seen them before; and yet he knew that he could not have done

The last person upon whose neck and wrists that priceless suite of antique gems had shone was the ill-fated marchioness, whom he had never seen, and whose end was still a mystery to him. He was convinced that he had never seen them before, and yet he seemed to remember

"Beautiful, beautiful?" murmured Spenser Churchill, but looking at his companion's face instead of the jewels with a watchful scrutiny.

"Yes, they are," said Lord Ceell, and he turned the remaining jewels over as if searching for something.

"What are you looking for?" demanded the marquis, his eyes fixed with a strange expression upon the pearls in Lord Ceell's bands.

"I am looking for the ring: I suppose there ought to be one to make the set compiete? There is everything else here." The marquis's face seemed to grow grey, then he laughed a dry, harsh laugh. "The ring is missing," he said, almost

"It went with-" inaudibly.

"No, no," cut in Spencer Churchill softly. "I naw it at the bottom of the box a moment ago; but, reelly, my dear Occil," he continued hurriedly, as if to prevent the marquis contradicting him, "I don't think they would suit dear Lady Grace as well as some of these other things. Now if I might suggest, may 1?" and with smooth dettness he took the case from him and picked out a diamond and ruby bracelet. Now that is the kind of thing which would piesse dear Lady Grace. These pearls will be more suitable when she is married."

The marquis took the bracelet, and Lord Cecil fancied that the claw-like hands trembled slightly, and looked at it absently. Then he dropped it on the table and turned aside with listless indifference

"The pearl suite will do," he said ourtly. "Take it and give it to her. Will you be good enough to send my man to me?" he added as a hint that he desired to be rid of their presence.

"Good-day, sir, and thank you," said Cecil, moving to the door.

"Stop, my dear Ceell, the mie. You must put those jewels away and lock it," said the marquis, with ley impatience.

"Oh, Ceall will look it," murmured Spenser Churchill. "I am going to get some lunch, marquis," and with a nod he went to the door, but there he turned, Oh, would you like a newspaper, marquist" he asked, and as he waited for the reply he watched Occil lock the safe and deposit the keys in the cabinet drawer.

"No!" answered the marquis almost fierosly, and the two men went out.

Speaser Churchill looked his arm in Lord Cecil's reluctant one.

"Deer marguis!" he murmured softly. "So generous and-er-thoughtful! You have made him very bappy, my dear Cocil. and be sure that his happiness will find fte reflection in your own heart. Abom! Did you notice, my dear Cooll, how—er—to-well and, so to speak, generally feeble he looked?"

"Mo," said Cooll gravely.

"Not Then parhaps indeed, I terrently hope—that if was only my fancy; but I cer-tainly did think that I saw a change in him since last I was here. I do hope it was only tancy! The world could ill afford to ione so great end kind hearted a man as our dear marquist And so you are going to marry the beautiful and charming Lady Grace! Ah, youth, youth! what a blessed possession it is! How I envy you, my dear

"Thanka" said Lord Ceoil, eartly. "I'll tell Lady Grace, who will feel duly com-plimented, I've no doubt."

"Yes, yes -tell her, you happy rogue!" said the philanthropist, and, with a playful nod and laugh, he watched Cecil go down the hall and out at the door.

Then his face changed to one of keep reflection, and, as he went into the dining room to the little lunch he had ordered, he muttered:

"Yes, the one I want is therei-and the keys are in that drawer, which he always keeps locked. I must have that will-bu

When the invitations to an evening party at Stoyle House were issued, they caused as much astonishment to the recipients and the world at large as if the trustees of the British Mussum had appounced their intention of giving a dance at that revered inetitetion.

Only a very few of the last generation re membered any entertainment at Stoyle House, and they declared that the rumos must either be false, or that the marquis had at last, and very appropriately, gone out of his mind; and it was not until signs of the vast preparations for the event made themselves felt that the world began to realize the truth.

Then arose such a struggle and scramble for tickets as occurs in connection with one of the events of the sesson, and Lady Grace was worried and pentered for an invitation as if it were a permit to Paradise itself.

For a couple of seasons she had been the seknowledged belie, but now it seemed as if suddenly she had become one of the veritable queens of society.

Wherever she went, she was surrounded by a crowd, eager to lay their tribute of adulation at the feet of the beautiful girl who had succeeded, where so many had fulled, in securing handsome Geetl Neville. the future Marquis of Stoyle.

Women who envied and hated her ap proached her with faces wreathed in amiles and voices soft and affectionate. Her carriage, or her horse, in the Park was surrounded by men eager to claim acquaintance with the future marchioness, who could give them invitations to so many shooting and hunting parties "when the marquis diedi"

And Lady Grace bore herself through it all with charming moderation. She delighted in all this worship, but it may be truly said, that she was never happier than when Lord Cecil was by her side. Some of us tire of the prise we scheme and toil so eagerly for; but in Lady Grace's eyes the prime she had so basely won incressed in value day by day,

She had loved him the first night they had met at Barton Towers, and her love, perhaps by opposition and the struggle she had made to win him, had grown into an absorbing passion. She was restless and nervous when he was absent, and those who knew her well could tell when he was in the room or near at hand, by the joyous emile on her lips and the soft glow in her

"Always thought that girl had no heart." remarked one keen observer- "Only shows how a fellow can be mistaken in a women. She's as clean gone upon Citiy as a girl

"And Cimy?" queried the man to whom he spoke; "what about him?"

The cynic shrugged his shoulders "Don't know. Seems as if he's got som thing on his mind, and couldn't get it off. Never new a man so changed in all my life: perhaps his happiness is rather too much for him."

And yet Lord Cecil's conduct gave no cause for evil comment. No man could be more attentive to his figness. He was with her every day, was by her side at nearly all the "At homes," was seen at the crushes at concerts and balls, her shawl upon his arm, the armitmelf always at her command; and yet the old "Closy" had gone, and in its place was the tall, grave faced man, with the took so if he had something on his mind.

The night of the party arrived. Some proparations had been necessary, and they had been made with a lavish hand, The big house which had sheltered so many generations of the Stoyles through so many London sessons, was oblese with lights, which shows upon the handsome descrafione of the great saloon and the magnificent dresses of the women.

Only at one of the state balls could have been seen such a display of diamonds, and very soon after the ball commenced it was declared by the experienced that it would prove the event of the seaso

It was not until the fourth dance on the list had been reached that the marquis put in an appearance. Lady Grace, magnifi-cently dressed—robed one might almost shance by the throng that surrounded her, but had shaken her head with a charming smile as she answered-

"ile has promised to some into the room if only for a few minutes, but I don't know when he will come."

She was, by right of her beauty and posttion, the queen of the brilliant assemblage, and she reigned in truly queenly fashion. Lord Geetl, moving about as host during his uncle's absence, glanced towards her now and again, and said to himself that if he needs must choose a mate, he could not have choosen a more beautiful or splendid one. But he sighed as he made the admission, and there rose before him the vision of Doris's ivory-pale face with its wealth of dark hair and witching blue eyes; and he would give haif to at remained of his life to be sitting at her feet once more; only once more!

He was roused from one of these fits of reverie by a subdued murmur of interest and curiosity, and looking up saw the tall thin figure of the marquis entering the room at one of the doors leading from his private spartments.

The clean-cut face was deadly pale, but the dark eyes shone with a hard, steel-like brilliance, and the thin, cruel lips wore a reflection of a smile as he came forward and greeted those near to him.

There was no vulgar pushing and crowding, but somehow, in an impalpable kind of way, a circle gathered round him, and then the marquis of old, or a shadow and sembiance of him, shone forth. The polished wit, like a rapier long disused, leapt from its scabbard, and set the group admiring and laughing as of yore. As he moved from one to the other, addressing his courtly flattery to the women and his biting cynicisms to the men, a feeling of wonder ran through the room.

"By Heaven!" exclaimed an old man who remembered him in years gone by, "it is like a resurrection! It is like going back a quarter of a century! That is the kind of wit we were accustomed to, sir! Look at him, and compare him with the young fellows of the present day! And don't tell me that we havent't degenerated!"

Lord Cecil stood a little apart looking on at the snooss which the marquis was making, the enthusiasm which he was arousing; when he felt a hand softly touch his arm, and Spencer Churchill's unetuons voice purred in his car.

"Do you see the dear marquis, Cecii? Wonderful, isn't it? Quite like what he used to be, I assure you! Remarkable man. Really it fills me with admiration and-er-astonishment! Did you hear that brilliant repartee of his at which they were all laughing?" "No," said Cecil gravely.

"Astonishing! Ah, my dear Cecil, he is a marvelious man. They were saying that he was going to dance-a square da of course, just a walk through a quadrille, but I shouldn't think-eh? Why, yes, he is-!" he broke off smoothly. "Actually is!" and followed by Cecil he made his way towards a circle that surrounded the marquis who was seen going towards Lady Grace

"These young people have set me thinking of old times, Lady Grace," he said, in his clear, metallic voice. "Will you dare to brave their ridicule by giving your hand to an old man? Or perhaps you would prefer a more suitable partner?" and he shot a sarcastic glance at Cecil, who had now reached his mds.

She bent towards him with perfect graand piaced her hand upon his arm.

A thrill of amasement and curiosity ran through the room, and those near the two fell back. The set was formed, and Lord Gedi found himself standing at one of the sides with a young girl for a partner.

"What a delightful man to have for an unciel" she said, with a smile.

"Yes, yes," he replied absently, his eyes fixed on the thin, white face.

The music commenced, the dance began, and the marquis, with a grace which reminded those of his old friends of the days when "Wicked Lord Stoyle" was in the prime of his youth-and his wiekedness!-

led Lady Grace to the centre. A crowd had collected round the set; all eyes were fixed upon him and the lovely woman who bore her triumph with such queenly selfsession, when suddenly a cry-a shudter rather—of alarm ran from lip to lip; for the erest, stately figure was seen to swerve and rock, and then stand will as if rooted to the spot, with its arms held above his head, and its starting eyes fixed strangely "Great Heaven! It's a fit! He's dying!" said someons.

Cecil sprang forward, and, just in time, caught him in his arms.

Someone silenced the band, and the whole assemblage became instantly muss.

Lord Cecil raised the motionism form in his arms—it seemed to weigh to him, so thin and emeciated was itand, through a lane of horrified spectators, his bedroom. Three persons followed him, - Lady Grace, Spenser Churchill, and the marquis's valet,-and entered the room with him, carried him up the broad stairs, and into

Lord Cecil laid his frail burden on the bed, and the valet quickly unfastened the old-fashioned cravat.

"It is a fit, my lord?" be murmured, agitatedly. "I expected it! I have been watching him from one of the doorways. His face was so white, and-and strained-

"Go for a doctor," said Lord Cecii, quietly. "Grace, go down, and get rid of these

"Onl come with me, Cecili" she said, brokenly; "I-I shall break down!"

"Yes, go with her," said Spenser Churchill. "You need not be more than a few minutes, and I'll stay here with him." Reinstantly, Oscil drew his arm within hers, and left Spenser Churchfil alone with the unconscious man.

Alone with him! He waited until Lady Grace and Lord Cecii had left the room; then, scarcely looking at the white, distorted face, he searched the pockets of the helpless man, and with a suppressed cry of satisfaction, darted to the cabinet, got the keys, and opened the

Taking out two deeds engrossed, "The last will and testament of the Marquis of Stoyle," he thrust one in the breast pocket of his coat, and placed the other in the safe, looked it, and returned the keys to the cabi-

Searcely had he done so, and taken his place at the bedside, than Lord Cecil and the valet hurried in with a doctor, who had been one of the guests.

He bent over the unconscious marquis and made his examination.

"Is he?-oh, don't say that my dear friend is dead!" exclaimed Spenser Churchill with a sob.

Lord Occil waited for the answer in stient horror.

"No, no, he is not dead! Open that window!" said the doctor. "It is a fit produced by sudden excitement."

"Thank Heaven!" murmured Spencer Churchill devoutly. "And will he recover, doctor?"

The doctor looked grave.

"I cannot sey. If he should-_" He esitated, and looked at Lord Cecil. "It is a very serious case, my lord; a sudden collapse. The unusual excitement has been too much for his lordship. He may recover, but if he should"-he stopped, and touched his forehead-"I fear it will a bodily and not mental recovery."

Spenesr Churchill drew back, and covared his face with his hands.

"My poor friend!" he sobbed; and if he gave expression to his thoughts he would have added, "will not be able to make a fresh will!"

CHAPTER XXX.

THE great marquis recovered consciousness by mid-day, but he lay cold and stient, the keen, hard face looking like a mask carved in old ivory. Cecil Neville scarcely left his side, and, though the marquis did not at empt to speak, ne turned his eyes upon him now and again with a curious expression in them. Mr. Spencer Churchill was, as became so wellknown and tender-hearted a philan-thropist, most attentive and sympathetic, and he hovered about the bedside, and shed the light of his benevolent countenance upon the patient, as if he were the marquie's brother. And him, too, the sick man regarded with an expression of thoughtful watchfulness.

Mr. Spenser Churchill waited four days, then, hearing from the doctors that the marquis might possibly remain in his present condition for weeks, or even months, he thought that he had better attend to the other threads of his plot. It res time that Percy Levant secured Doris Everything in England was working wonderfully well for Mr. Spenser Oburchilf, and, in anticipation, he could almost see the accomplishment of his object and the reward of all his scheming and tolling.

"It outs me to the heart to leave the dear patient, Cecil," he said; "but I have most urgent business on the continent, connect ed with one of our great charitable societies, and I really must go. I have the consolision of reflecting that I leave my dear old triend in such loving hands as yours and Lady Grace's. He will, I know, receive every attention that affectionate hearts can suggest,"

"Yes," said Used, rather grimly. "We shall peither starve nor neglect him; don't remain a moment longer than you like. You had better leave your address."

"Y-es," said Spenser Churchill. "Pear me, I searcely know what address to give you, I shall be moving about so much for the first lew weeks; but perhaps you had better write to Meurigny's, at Paris. You will telegraph to me, of course. I shall be back as soon as possible. And when I come," he added mentally, as he wrung Cecil's hand, "perhaps I may have the satisfaction of dealing you a slight shock, my self-sufficient young friend?"
He started for Italy that same evening, and three days later appeared in the garden of the Villa Rimini to find that Doris had consented to be Percy Levant's wife.

There was something so complete in the success of his plans that Mr. Spenser Churchill was almost startled. The marquis lying bereft of resson and belpiess away in England, and Doris Mariows engaged to Percy Levant! It was little short of marvellous "Now, it I could only see them married," he marmared, as he lay on the lawn smoking a cigarette, and blinking placedly up at the blue sky; "if I could only see them married, and the dear marquis would kindly remove himself from this troublone world, I should be ten thousand pounds richer in pocket, and be able to repay my dear Lord Cecil for the many, the very many anube he has bestowed upon me. Ah. here comes Percy. How the young man hates met And yet 1 have been the actual means of giving him a beautiful wife and a large fortune. Strange how deeply ingratitude is engrained in the human heart! Well, Percy," he purred, "and how is dear Miss Marlows now? It was nothing serious, I trust? Only the heat, my dear Percy? I noticed that the room was hot, and the air quite heavy with flowers. I'm not sure that too many flowers are wholesome; to some uitra refined sensibilities, like those of our dear Miss Doris for instance, their perfume is over whelming. How is she?" Percy Levant stood with folded arms looking thoughtfully into vacancy, his me face grave and sombre.

"Miss Marlowe has gone to her own room," he said in a low voice. "Yes, it may have been the heat and the scent of the flowers." As he spoke he took his society journal from his pooket and opened it. "What was it Lady Despard was reading when-when Miss Marlowe fainted, Churchill?" and he bent his dark eyes keenly upon the placid face.

Spenser Churchill touched his white, mooth forehead with his forefinger.

"Really, my dear Persy. I torgot? Wasn't it something about that floral fete to the Amaigamated Charity Children? Or was it the account of Lady Brabason's bail? Miss Marlowe's audden and alarming inmatter out of my head."

Percy Levant looked at him fixedly, then opened the paper and scanned it carefully; then his eyes flashed as he came across the paragraph respecting Lord Cecil's engagement, and be read it sloud.

"That was it, was it not?" "N-o, I don't think so, but I really can't be sure. To tell you the truth I wasn't paying much attention. You see, I'd read the paper coming across."

"It was it, and you know it," said Percy Levant in a low voice.

"Was it? I deresay. But what has that to do with Miss Mariowe, swoon?" inquired Spenser Churchill with a patient Percy Levant peced up and down, his bead sunk upon his breast.

"I don't know," he muttered inaudibly;

"but I will know!"

"Don't look so distressed, my dear Percyf purroa Spenser Churchill, leaning his head on his elbow, and watching him through half-closed eyes. "I true there is nothing to be really anxious about. Miss Doris will be well and honor ps with her presence at lunch, or at dinner at latest. Of course, I can understand your anxiety, but don't give way to it, my dear Percy. Will you come and sit down? I want to talk to rou for a few moments."

Percy Levant stopped short in his pacing to and fro, and looked down at him. "Well?" he said impatiently.

"I want to speak to you about riage," said Speaser Churchill. "What marriage?" demanded Percy Le vant with a frown.

Spenser Churchill opened his eyes and langhed softly.

"Why, your marriage, my dear fellow," he returned; "yours and Miss Doris's. I den't know whether you agree with me, but I am, on principle, strongly opposed to long engagements. When two young bearts are yearning for each other-Percy, this marriage must take place at once," he broke off with a sharp and sudden change

Percy Levant watched him closely and In stience for a moment.

"Why?" he saked

Spenser Churchill smiled blandly.

"For several reasons; one, and not the least, being my anxiety to see two young people in whom I am deeply interests made happy: another, if I may be candid, is because I am anxious to complete our contract and destroy the bond," and he touched his breast-pocket.

A strange expression came into Percy Levant's face, came and passed like a flash. "You want your money?" he said.

"Naturally; and you want your bride! So that we are of one mind, my dear Percy."

"And what if I say that I will go no further in this wile business; if I say that I will no longer be a party in this company against a helpiess girl?" said Percy Levan in a low voice, and with a sudden crimson rising to his face.

Spenser Churchitl smiled blandly.

'But you won't say any such nonsense, my dear fellow," he retorted, blowing a thin wreath of smoke from his completent lips; "and it would be nonsense, sheer nonsense, for you couldn't draw back if you would, because, my dear Percy, you are so completely and madly in love with her!"

Parcy Levant grew pale, and he elenched his hands.

"You fiend?" he muttered. Spenser Churchill laughed softly.

Come, come, we had enough hard nan last night! If I am a fiend, as you call it, don't you be a fool. Why, my good sir, you have got everything you wanted, and, like a spoiled child, you are still dissatis fied, and want to quarrel with the person give up charming Doris Mariowel Tut. tut, you couldn't do it; now, could you?"

Percy Levant turned his head aside, and something like a groan escaped his com-who has been your best friend. What, pressed lips. "No, you couldn't. And therefore I say that the sooner the marriage takes place, and you have got for your bride the beautiful young creature with whom you are so madly in love, the better. 'A bird in the hand,' and 'There is many a slip, etc., etc.' You know the two old, but exquisitely true, proverbs, I darssay. Get the marriage over, my dear Percy!"

"You speak of a marriage, and we were engaged only last night!" he said, after a pause. "Do you think she would consent? Hew little you know her. Perhaps you think"-with a bitter smile-"that she is as madly in love with me as I am with her!' Spenser Churchill shook his bead.

"No, my dear fellow, I don't think anystand why Miss Doris has promised to marry you. But if she doesn't love you now, she will do. On, yes, believe me, with most women love comes after mar Ailight shone in the dark eyes for a moment, then fuded out again, and left the handsome face grave and moody.

"I think she will consent-in fact, I am sure she will." He leant forward on his elbow, and whispered the ensuing words insidiously. "She must be made to!"

"Made tof"

"Yes. Tut, tut, don't look so black. Moral force, not physical, my dear Percy, is what I mean. Listen to me. I think you will admit that, up to now, my judgment has been pretty correct, and that I didn't start you on a wild-goose chase that morning in Soho, when I offered to give you a beautiful wife, and make your fortune. Eh, my dear Percy? Well, I'll finish what I began, and here is my little plan. Do you know Peasta?"

Percy Levant nodded.

"A charming little place, my dear Percy. So quiet and secluded, and so much healthfor than Florence. Now if I were a medical man I should say that Miss Doris wanted a change, and that no place, within even only distance, could be more suitable than Pescia. Though I am not a doctor, I think shall venture to suggest to Lady Despard that she and Doris go there for a few Percy Levant listened intently, his brilliant eyes covered by their long dark lashes, so that Spenser Churchill could not see the expression that gleamed in them. "Well, they go to Pessis, and you, of course, with them. You are there, may, a fortnight or three weeks, when I write to offer you an engagement at a large salary, in Australia."

Percy Levant did not move a muscle.

"It is a most tempting offer, but, simi poor as you are, you cannot bring yourself to leave your lady-tove for years, perhaps for ever, as the song says. And what so natural and resconable as the sugge that you should marry her, and take her out with you? At first, she will bedtateoh! yes, certainly she will hemitate—but I think—" with a smile, "I think I do not over-estimate your powers of persu when I say that I am convinced you will overcome her reluciance to so heaty a marriage. There is a charming little English church in Pescis-most charming!the very church for a quiet wedding. A quist wedding, mark me, my dear Percy! You see! Come, admit that I am as thoughtful on your behalf as even a parent could bel" and he laughed unotuously.

"To Australia!" said Percy Levant in a low voice.

Spenser Churchil made a mooking gea-

"Nonsense, my dear fellow! Why should you go to Australia? On the day after the edding you and I will have a little explanation. I shall have the happiness of telling you whom you have married, and the extent of your good fortune; of putting you in the way of paying me that little bonus we agreed upon—and then you may go where you please—London—Paris—Jeri-

"I see," said Percy Levant slowly. "It is a clever plan. And you will tell me nothing until after the marriage? You will not trust me -- "

The gentle philanthropist's smile spoke volumes by way of answer. It really meant, "Do you take me for a fool?"

"Yes, it is a clever plan," repeated Percy Levant. "But, clever as it is, I think you will spoil it, Spenser Churchill."

"If Spoti it!" he echoed with reproachful indignation.

"Yes, I think so. Do you think Lady Despard will not suspect that there is something wrong when you dog our footsteps and follow us about

Mr. Spenser Churchill laughed. "But I do not intend to inflict my pres ence upon you, my dear Percy. I shall sak dear Lady Despard's permission to remain here at the villa, in charge, as it were, during her absence. You see? So that there will be nothing to be suspicious about," [TO BE CONTINUED.]

KISSING MOTHER.-How many young ladies of to-day would laugh at the absurd idea, as they express it, of kissing mother; but you cannot, dear girls, imagine how it will brighten her dark face. Besides, you owe her a kiss or two. Away back, when you were a little girl, she kissed you when no one else was tempted by your fevertainted breath and swollen face. You were not as attractive then as you are now. And through those years of childish sunshine and shadows she was always ready to cure dirty, chubby hands when ever they were injured in those first sairmishes with the rough world. And then the midnight kieses with which she routed so many bad dreams as she leaned above your restless pillow have all been on interest these long, long years. Of course, she is not so pretty and kissable as you are, but if you had done your share of work these last ten years the contrast would not be so marked. Her face has more wrinkles than yours, and yet if you were sick that face would appear far more beautiful than an angel's as it hovered over you, watching every opportunity to minister to your comfort, and every one of those wrinkles would seem to be bright wavelets of sunshine chasing each other over the dear face.

THERE are four services at all state dinners at the White House. The dishes, in their order, are served on silver platters by waiters, the guests helping themselves. The chief waiter serves the President first, and then proceeds toward the right, and the second waiter toward the left. The mme course is observed on the opposite side of the table, beginning with the presiding lady. No one is ever served twice.

Bric-a-Brac.

ORRAPHES,-The diminution of cost of production effected in modern times by the mprovements in proce mes of manufacture s wonderful. Thus, a gross of steel pens which are to-day sold for 10 cents, formerly post $35.00 to produce.

RED.-If the question were saked, even in a hunting country, how did the custom of wearing searlet coats when fox-hunting originate, there are many who are ignorant that it dates back to 1188, when Henry II. issued a Royal mandate, proclaiming foxhunting a sport for Kings, and enjoining at who took part therein to wear the Royal livery. Probably the oldest fasition on ARAB COURTESY .- When an Arab meets a friend, he seises his right-hand thumb, and goes through the entire list of the friends and relations, grasping a new finger for each enquiry for the welfare of the family, and if the fingers do not hold out, starts anew until the category is gone through with. The Persians simply touch the forehead, while the Chinese, Burmese, and most other nations do equally es simple.

DEATH AND THE JEWS .- Just as near relatives are excluded from the death chamber of a Jew, so are females prohibited from attending a funeral or interment. The castom of excluding women on such occasions is certainly not an ancient one, since we know from the Talmud and later rabbinical books that, of old, women joined in the funeral processions of their people, hanting dirges appropriate to the ceremony. However, nowadays the obsequies are attended by males only.

POLITERES.—The men of Japan are iways excessively polite to one another-They bend their backs and bow their beads, and put their two hands back to back between their knees and have a great time. But the most amusing thing is to see two old ladies in Japan meeting one another in the street. They catch sight of one another three or four blocks apart. They immediately begin to make obelsance at one another, and they keep bending and bowing until they come together, when they make a peculiar him by drawing in the breath, and keep on saying "Ohavo" for about two minutes.

ODD FUNERALS.-The funeral observances in Madagascar are very ceremonious, as might be expected in a country where the worship of ancestors has so long been a part of its religion, and the graves and vaults are reverenced as sacred pisces. They are usually only shapeless mounds of earth or stone, near which are erected wooden stakes, eight or nine feet high, with skulls and horns of oxen fixed or impaled on the wood. These are objects of worship, or at least of special veneration, for they are the heads of bullooks sacrificed in honor of the dead at the time of burial. It is usual to inter the dead near the dwelling BWANS.-In Hampshire, swans are believed to be hatched in thunderstorms; and it is said that those on the Thame have an instinctive prescience of floods: before heavy rains they raise their nests. When rooks fly high and seem to imitate birds of prey by soaring, swooping, and falling, it is almost a certain sign of a coming storm. The constant iteration of the green woodpecker's ery before a storm has given it the names of rain-bird, rain-pie, and rainfowl. Stormeock is a provincial name shared by this bird and the mis the latter often singing through gaies of wind and rain. Stormbird also is applied to the fieldfare.

A DEFECTIVE MEMORY.-A gentleman was recently a victim of defective memory. He arranged to give an elaborate dinner to s numerous and distinguished company. The appointed evening arrived: the collation, an elegant one, was all ready to be served, but the guests came not. Half-anhour passed and still they did not come, and the host became really uneasy. When the delay had grown to an bour, and not a man of them had shown up, his feelings were indescribable. And who can picture his agony of spirit when, on returning to his room, he chanced to pull open a drawer, and therein found the whole bundle of invitations, which he had forgotten to post!

NELLIE PATTERSON, said to be Connecticut's only female machinist, is described as a handsome girl, bright eyed, quick in action and very popular. She is employed by the Mount Carmel Belt Company, and is a full fledged machinist, having served her full time at the trade and mastered it in all its details.

A love, as far removed from passion's heat
As from the chiliness of 156 dying fire;
A love to lean on when the falling feat legin to totter and the eyes to tire.

In youth's brief beyday bottest love we The reddest rose we grasp—but when it dies, God grant later bloscoms, violets meek, May spring for us beneath life's Autumn sk God grant that some loving one be near to bless Our weary way with simple tenderness,

A Lord's Daughter

BY THE AUTHOR OF "A PINCE OF PATCH WORK," "BOMERODY'S DAUGHTER,"

"A MIDSUMMER POLLY," "WEDDED HANDS," RTC., BTC.

CHAPTER XXVII.

TOU HAD MUCH SETTER give it up, Lucille," said Laurence Doyle, " really don't think it is at all a male thing to do-anybody might see you there. and mention it to Sir Adrian. And after the fright we had the other night tool"

Ob, that has blown over completely! He has never alluded to it again; I quite persuaded him that it was entirely an accidental thing your dropping in, and that you came to see aunt Adelaids. I assure you he has never mentioned your name singe,

"H'm," murmured Laurie dublously-"that doesn't prove that he doesn't rememberit! By George, when I think of his turn in my life-it made me turn quite

They were walking slowly together along the path in the Park which runs parallel to Park Lane. It was six o'olock, a mild fine winter evening, and it was exceeding. ly dark.

Since the catastrophe of the by gone unlucky evening Lucilie had been afraid to allow Leurence Doyle to come openly to the house; and so she had arranged to run out from her aunt's house as soon as Bir Adrian's afternoon visit was over-he usually went away at half-past five .. and meet Laurie at the gate in the Park at the end of Green Street.

It was the day before the Uxerton Races and Laurie was trying to persuade her to give up the wild and perilous expedit-

He might as well have endeavored to move the Marble Arch, upon which his eyes were fixed.

Lucille looked forward to the adventure with all the sest and delight of a child who is plotting an escape from school.

The fact that Adrian had forbidden her to see Laurence Doyle only increased her determination to go her own way, and the element of danger did but add fuel to the self-will and the reckless bravado which had completely taken possession of her.

She did not tell Mr. Doyle that her lover had forbidden her to see him; for she said to herseif that men were cowards, and that it was of no use telling him everything.

Nevertheless he knew enough to be sure that she would get into serious trouble if he were found out; and he told her so very plainly.

"But I shall not be found out!" she oried irritably. "I tell you he starts tonight for Scotland, and he will not be back for a week. He is coming to dine with us at quarter-past seven, and he is to bring his luggage round to Green Street; so that I suali sctually see him off. You may be sure that I shall pack him off in good time to catch his train-trust to me to do thet"

"And then there is Lady Elwyn. What are you going to say to her?

"My dear Laurie, what a coward you arel I shall leave the house at half-past eight, before my aunt is out of bed. I shall tell her to-night that Kathleen has asked me to spend a long day with her, as that new companion of here is going away, and I shall go out directly I have had my breakfast in my room. She will never know at what time I started; and I shall be back by dinner-time-you have promised me that."

"Oh, yee-I think we can manage that easily; but it seems a dreadful rick!

"One would think that you did not went to have me with you!" abe pouted, pretending to draw away her hand from under his arm.

"My dearest," he eried, holding it fast, you know it is not that; you know that I shall be delighted to take you, and to be slone with you for so long -it will be such a happy day for me! But then I am afraid trouble may come of it afterwards for you. Lucille, suppose by any chance Devereli should find it out, and suppose it should make a quarrel betweenlyou, and suppose your engagement came to an end-would you marry me then?"

"Suppose, and suppose, and suppose!" eed mockingly. "My dear Laurie, I was always a bad hand at guessing conundrums, so don't ask unanswerable questional And now I must run home; and at half-past eight to-morrow morning wet or fine, I shall be here by this gate to meet you. I have set my heart upon going, so it's of no use your saying any more about It. Good-bye!"

Under cover of darkness he seized her suddenly in his arms and covered the beautiful false face with passionate kisseskisses such as no man on earth should have had the right to press upon the lips of the future Lady Devereil.

But Lucitie was neither angered nor insuited; she knew it was the one peces penalty she was bound to pay for the enjoy ment of her forbidden fruit.

She liked him in a way-and of the two uen she preferred that Laurie should kim her rather than Adries.

When she reached home, cautiously pening the door with her latch-key so that her aunt should not hear her, she stole upstairs to her bed-room, and, opening her wardrobe, fastened her eyes on the protty dark-gray dress and jacket trimmed with silver fox for which she meant to wear on the morrow, and took out the dainty gray feit bat to match, and tried it on her shining head before the glass.

It suited her to perfection; and in the rapture of the prospect of wearing tals new tinery her conscience forgot to trouble her about the disgraceful action which she contemplated, nor did she even feel nervous about its dangers.

Then her maid came in; and she made haste to dress in a simple black eveninggown, and nurried down-stairs, to find Hir Adrian and her aunt awaiting her for dinner.

Adrian's luggage stood in the ball, and the mere sight of his portmenteen and hatbox made Lucille feel quite gay and happy at the prospect of his departure.

Long before there was the least occasion for it, she meant to tell the butler to have a cab summoned and the luggage placed upon it. She had said to Laurie that she was not going to let him miss his train if she could avoid it.

Dinner was over at last. Deverell had wallowed his coffee and stood up before the dining-room fire whilst the butier brought in his heavy fur-lined traveling-

Adrian consulted his watch.

"I have heaps of time," he remarked drily.

'Our clocks here are rather slow," said Lucille.

"No-not by my watch. However since the cab is here-"Yes; it would be a pity if you missed your train," said Lucille, who was nervously anxious to see him depart. Lady Elwyn unconsciously played into her niece's hands by observing the , for her part, she always preferred to have pienty of time at the station when she was going on a journey.

Bir Adrian said, while the butler was helping uim with his coat.

He set light to his cigar with Lady Elwyn's permission, shook hands with her, and kissed Lucille lightly on the forehead.

In another minute he was off, and the sound of the cab wheels rolled away quick: ly down the street. Lucille seemed to breathe more freely; and then she and her aunt went up-stairs,

"I cannot think why you want to spend the day with that hateful girl," said her aunt to her, when she had unfolded her little plan for the morrow to her, se they sat together before the fire. "I always thought you did not like ber."

"I don't like her much, But then I have been thinking that it is as well to keep in with her. She is very rich, and will probably make a good marriage; it might be convenient to me to know her by and-by, and very inconvenient to be on bad terms with her. On the whole, I think I will go. She has written me a nice letter asking me to me for the whole day to-morrow, as her compenion will be away. It happens to suit mer because, as Adrian will be absent, shall have no ties at home,"

"That is true! May I see her letter?" asked Lady Elwyn.

"Unfortunately I have torn it up. There was nothing clas in it. I think I may as well gratify her, and go directly after breakfast. You will not be up, aunt Adelaide; so that I will not disturb you in the morning. I shall be back in good time for dinner."

"Very well; perhaps you are right to go. Of course I can never set eyes on her again; it would make me ill to see ber after all the terrible trouble she has brought upon me."

For by this time Lady Elwyn had almost persuaded herself to believe that Kathleen had killed her father.

"But your case is different. My dear, go if you like; and I will call upon and lunch with my old friends in Grosvenor Place, so that I shall not miss you."

And presently the ladies parted for the night.

Clever as Miss Maitland was, she had on this occasion been a little too clever; she over-reached her mark. She had said to Laurie that she would see that Sir Adrian went off sufficiently early to catch his train, and she had despatched him in such good time that, when he looked at his watch as the cab was turning into Oxford Street, he found that he had over forty-five minutes in which to get to Euston Station. He determined to drive to his club and call for his letters.

The cab-horse was a good one. In seven minutes Sir Adrian reached Pall Mali. He ran up the steps of his club and the parter handed him one letter.

He tore it open hastily and read-

"The Lady Superior of the Nurses' Institute, Bloomsbury Square, presents her compliments to Sir Adrian Devereil, and writes to inform him that Mrs. Hyam returned last night to town, and is staying for two days only at No. 15, Tiverton Street-Spe will be leaving London or a situation in Devonshire early on Friday morning."

Sir Adrian stood hesitating for a moment with the letter in his hand; then he turned to the porter and said-

"Go and take my luggage out of that cab and pay the cabman;" and to himself he remarked, "Scotland can wait. I shall put off going until Friday. The chance of getting hold of Mrs. Hyam is too good a one to be thrown away."

He sent off a telegram to Edinburg, wrote a note to Tiverton Street making an appointment to call on the nurse at eleven o'crock the next morning, and spent the remainder of the evening quietly at his ciub.

On the following morning, punctual to the minute, he presented himself at the house in Tiverton Street, and was shown into a small humbly-furnished parlor by a respectable old woman in a black net cap and a rusty black stuff dress.

"My daughter-in-law will see you directly, sir. Will you please take a meat?"

"le this Mrs. Hyam your daughter inlaw, madam? Then your name is Hyam

"No sir. My name is Cole; my son has just married-

"Oh, I see! Mrs. Hyam is now Mrs. Cole!" said Adrian.

Then the door opened and Mis. Cole the younger entered, whilst Mrs. Oole the elder disappeared. "Well, I am sure, Sir Adrian, this is a great honor to me! I am proud to see you, mir!' "I must congratulate you, Mrs. Cole!"

replied Adrian, with emphasis on the sur-Mrs. Cole-late Hyam-simpered and loozed down modestly; and these little preliminaries being despatched, Adrian proceeded to business.

"I have come to see you, Mrs. Cole, because I want you to relate to me exactly what happened on the evening of Lord Elwyn's death."

The woman looked startled; all her airs and graces vanished, and she was at once on her guard.

"I did my duty by Lord Elwyn, sir," she said stiffly.

"Every one knows that, Mrs. Cole; no oue has ever doubted it. But you will, as a favor to me, try to recall every trifling incident that occurred previous to the unexpectedly sudden termination of Lord. Elwyn's life?"

Mrs. Cole turned red and white; she looked at her questioner with evident apprehension, and seemed uncertain as to what she should say.

"My memory is not very good, sir," she began besitatingly.

"Let me try to refresh it," said Adrian; and, so he spoke, he drew out his pocketbook and began Apparing bate two orisp five-pound notes.

Mrs. Cole's confession began to be once more as her eyes fell upon them.

"Oh, sir, to a geotlemen like you, as knows how to be the gentlemen, of course I would not mind what I said, more especially as I feel sure you would not go and take the bread out of a poor w mouth by making use of anything against

"Nothing that you can say shall be used against you, Mrs. Cole. For my own private satisfaction only I desire to find out the truth as to that evening's calamity,"

Mrs. Cole sat down and crossed her hands in her lap, then saked quietly-"What is it you wish to know, sir."

"I want to know first whether you isft Lord Elwyn at all alone during the last hour of his life?"

"I did not leave him alone, sir-I should not have thought of doing such a thingand I am sure that I have regretted it since most bitterly that I did run down-stairs for a minute just to have a glass of wine, as I was very tired that afternoon and quite faint-like. I am sure, if I'd have known, I'd never have left the room for one minute."

"You did leave him then?" said Adrian quickly. "For how long, Mrs. Cole? Burely for longer than one minute?" "Well, sir, if you promise never to breathe a word of it at the Institute-for I am sure it shall never occur again, sir, and it would go dreadfully against me there if if ware to be known-

"You may rely on me, Mrs. Cole." Again Sir Adrian rustled the bank-notes between his fingers. "Then, sir, I will make a clean breast of it! I did linger a bit down-stairs. I got talking, you see, and didn't notice the time. It's very dull for a nurse, you know, sir, sitting always in a siek-room, and just a little change of scene and company cheers one up and helps to send one back freaher, Well, I stayed talking in the pantry, sir-if the truth must be known, it might have been ten minutes, and I won't exactly wear that it might not have been twenty." Adrian took out his pecket-book and wrote down the nurse's state "Yes; and, while you spent those ten or twenty minutes down stairs, Mrs. Cole, what went on up-stairs in the sick-room? You say you did not leave Lord Elwyn alone. Who was there?"

"Well, sir, I will tell you the exact truth. As I was a-tidying up things in the dressing-room, there came in a most lovely young lady-not his lordship's daughter as and been sitting with him some time preriously, but another lady, tailer and more beautiful, whom I had not seen before; and she inquired how her 'dear uncle' was, and seemed very unbappy. She saked me if she might be allowed to do something to help-and her pretty eyes were filled with tears, and I hadn't the heart to refuse; and so I told her she might cresp in and sit by the bedside behind the curtains quite quiet whilst I ran down stairs for a minute. His lordship was enjoying a nice little dose that should have freshened him up wonderful; so I told her to touch the bell if he woke, and not to speak. I just waited a minute to fisten if all was quiet after she had gone into the room, and then I ran down-stairs; and the very next thing I hears is all them screams and shricks upstairs; and, when I came rushing in, his lordship lay in his death-agony on the floor, and the lawyer-gentleman was kneeling by his side lady, screening the house dows, rushing along the passages towards the staircase."

There was a moment of stience; then Adrian said very gravely-"You know that young lady's name,

Mrs. Colet" "Yes, sir; I was told afterwards. It was Miss Maitiand, her ladyship's own niece; and I was told too that she had no love for Miss Elwyn, and would have liked to perwade her uncle to change his will before he died."

"Mrs. Oole, tell me what you really think happened—was Miss Maitland to blame?" "Yes, eir, decidedly, because I warned her most particularly not to agitate the patient, and told her that it would be most dangerous if he got excited; and she certainly must have wakened him up and said something to agitate and excite him. Why, the very fact of her calling the lawyer shows that! Why did she call the lawyer? If I'd been there, I'd never have let that lawyer into the room, eir-not till his lordship had had a night's rest, at any ratel Oh, I take blame to myself, str, I sasure you. I know I ought never to have left the poor gentleman. But there—the pest of us is but human, Sir Adrian-and It's been a

leanon to me anyhowith

What you tell me is very serious, Mrs. Cole," said Adrian, after a pause. "I have written it all down, but not for any other purpose save my own satisfaction. I do not mind informing you that what you tell me only corroborates my own very strong suspicions. But of course your story will not be made use of against you—in fact, it could not be so used, as there is no one else to testify to its truth."

well, I'm not so sure of that, Sir Adrian. There's my husband as could swear to my going down-stairs and to the length of time I stayed out of the room. Ah, here he is, sir! You remember John, I dare say, as was upper-footman at the

And, to Sir Adrian's intense surprise, the late upper-lootman at Clortell Towers entered the room and announced himself to be none other than John Cole.

"Yes, sir," said his wife, in explanation, "me and John settled it together at that time. I had met him once before two years ago, so we were old friends; and it were that very evening as I stole down into the pantry to see him that John give me a glass of sherry and asked me to marry him."

"And it took twenty minutes to do ht?" remarked Sir Adrian.

By this time the rustling bank-notes had been transferred from Adrian's pocket-book to Mrs. Cole's fat comfortable hands; and so, as the object of bis visit had been accomplished, he wished the worthy couple all good fortune and happiness and bade them adieu.

When he was outside in the street again, he raised his hat for a moment from his head and drew a long breath of railel.

"Now for Lucille," he said to himself. "With this evidence I must force her to confess all and to vindicate Kathleen's honor. She must do so in writing freely and completely, or I shall refuse to marry her. But she will do it. My name and fortune as too highly prised by her-she will not sacrifice them. What I will do then shall be this. I will marry her, and she shall have her settlement and her share of my fortune; but we shall separate afterwards, I will have a deed of separation drawn up which we shall both sign immediately after our marriage, I will be her husband in name only. Those are the terms I will lay before her. I shall be as far from Kathleen as ever; but at least 1 will not be forced to live with a woman whose character I loathe and detest, and for whom I have not one spark either of affection or esteem?"

He determined to wait until the hour of his usual afternoon-visit to Green Street. He had letters to write and some businessmatters to transact, and it was not till six o'clock in the evening that he entered Lady Elwyn's drawing-room.

He found that lady sions,

"Why, Adrian," she cried, in astonishment, as he entered, "you have not gone to Scotland then!"

"No. I was stopped at the last moment by some important business. I shall go tomorrow night instead. Where is Lucille? I want to see her."

"She has not some home. She went to spend the day with Kathleen Eiwyn. Very kind of her, wasn't it?"

"With Kathleen Elwyn!" repeated Sir Adrian, in amassment "How very strange!"

He glanced at the clock.

"She will be in directly; she is coming back in time for dinner. Will you wait, Adrian?"

"Yes, if you please. I want to speak to her particularly. Don't let me disturb you, Lady Elwyn, if you want to read your book."

He took up a newspaper, and Lady Elwyn went back to her novel. They must have waited the best part of an hour, and still Lucille did not put in an appearance.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

In the Early morning of a pleasant winter day, dry, mild without rain, and aunahiny without frost, Lucille Maitland and Laurence Doyle had started together from Euston Station on their way to Uxerton Steeplechases.

Lucille's new gray costume fitted her to perfection, and the silver fox fur round her throat suited her fair akin admirably. She looked extremely handsome, and was al'ogether a companion to be proud of; and Laurie Doyle did not fail to tell her so. They had a first-class compartment to themselves; and all the way down to the junction where they had to change the infatuated Laurie did not fail to avail himself of his opportunities.

He made love to his companion freely and without reserve; and Lucille, though half remonstrating, half rebuking, allowed him to do pretty much as he liked.

"It is his last chance, poor boy; I may as well be kind to him," she thought; and the "kindness" consisted in allowing him to kies her as often as he wished.

Once he tried to draw her head down on his shoulder; but Miss Maitland would not permit that—not because the intention shocked her sense of honor or propriety, but simply because she was airsid that her becoming gray felt hat would be crushed.

When they reached the junction, all these joys came to an end. There was a crowd on the platform going to the races, and everybody made for the Uzerton train.

The carriage into which Lucille and her cousin got was quickly filled; and so they devoted themselves strickly to business and to the study of their race-cards.

The Uxerton race-course was prettily situated on the gentle slope of a low hill, upon the summit of which was erected a small but smartly-decorated stand.

Laurie's first zere was to procure a good seat in the front row for Lucilie, and to provide her with race-glasses and a footstool for her feet; and then he gad to leave her to go and consult his jockey and his trainer, and to inspect his horse.

The ground was fast filling; wagoneties and open carriages with ladies and their attendant swains were taking up their position one after another upon the reserved space immediately opposite to the stand; and presently a regimental coach with a fine level team of serviceable bay horses came gally into view across the grassy meadow, and attracted general attention and admiration, at the same time causing a flutter of pleasureable excitement in the beautiful feminine bosoms in the grand

Lucille soon discovered, from the conversation of the ladies about her, who were all strangers to her, that it was considered quite the right thing to do to go and lunch upon the coach of the—th Light Dragoons, and that not to be permitted to partake of food of any kind at the expense of the hospitable and light-hearted officers of that popular regiment was looked upon as a kind of siur upon a woman's popularity and powers of attraction.

She heard some of the ladies teiling how they had been specially invited to lunch on the coach; others said that they had been saked to tes; whilst some, less highly favored by fortune, sat sulky and said nothing.

Miss Mattland instantly made up her mind that, stranger though she was, she would not end the day without finding herself installed upon the box seat of that regimental coach.

When Laurie came back to her, full of satisfactory news concerning Decision, she cut short his racing confidences by informing him that she desired him to get an invitation for her to lanch upon the coach of the —th Dragoons. But Laurie did not see his way to it.

"I know only one man in the —th, Lucille—a young chap estied Danman—I saw him in the paddock just now; but I can't very well ask him so early in the day Beeldes, just look at the women swarming up on the coach alrendy! Why, all the best places are taken! You would not like to be stuffed in at the back where you could "And where nobody could see me. No;

perhaps you are right."

"Moreover, I have just ordered a nice little hot lunch, and secured a table in the luncheon room behind the stand. Come along, let us have some food at once before the first race!"

Lucilie graciously acceded to this proposition, and soon did ample justice to hot outlets and a bottle of excellent champagne.

"All the same," she said to Laurie, as she beamed upon him across the little table,
"I mean to be on that box seat before the day is over! If I can see Decision run from there I shall be satisfied."

Laurie promised to see what could be done; and, after luncheon, when they adjourned to the paddock, he managed to in troduce his companion to Mr. Danman, the young subaltern in the —th with whom he was slightly acquainted, and at whom Luchle smiled so sweetly that he lost his heart at once, and, being deeply struck with her beauty and graciousness, forthwith pressed her to go over to the coach for refreshment.

"Perhaps I will come by-and-by; but you must promise me the box-seat," she said playfully, "or cise I will not come at all!"

And Mr. Danman undertook that Hebould be kept for her.

And now the saddling-bell rang, and the fockeys were soon mounted and trotted leisurely out of the paddock towards the course.

Every one rushed back to his or her place; and Lucille, with Laurie at her side, resumed her seat in the grand stand.

Laurie's horse, which had been originally entered for two races—the second and the last—had, by the advice of the knowing ones, been withdrawn from the second race in order to reserve his strength and make a certainty of the last. Laurie had therefor no anxiety on his mind during the first part of the day, and could afford to enjoy Lucilie's society without an after-thought.

The eager and excited browd of faces on either side of the course, the gay colors of the jockeys, and the sleek coats of the horses as they shot by made up a very charming and lively picture. Lucille and Laurie exchanged little friendly bets with each other—which Lucille generally won—between every race.

They went into the paddock, inspected the last winner, and walked sorutinizingly round the prospective favorite. Laurie frequently nodded to some friend or acquaintance, who locked admiringly and a little curiously at his beautiful companion; out Lucille thought it fortunate that she did not happen to know anybody.

At last she become anxious to secure the much envised place upon the regimental coach upon which she had set her heart. Laurie, who was backing his own horse somewhat heavily for the last race, had gone into the ring; and when he returned to his seat in the stand, Lucilie said to him—

"Now take me over to that coach, Laurie.
If I get up there, you will then be able to leave me and attend to your betting; and I shall not mind your going away one bit."

"I was just going to tell you," answered the young man seriously, "that I really think you had better not go across to the coach. I find that there is a man here called Hepburn who is a great friend of Devereit's. I met him in the betting-ring a moment ago, and he saked me if I had seen Devereit lately, and when he was going to be married. Does he know you oy sight?"

"I was introduced to Colonel Hepburn a long time ago—I dare say he will not recollect me. I think I will risk it any-

"I think you had better not. He is staying as a guest with the regiment. He is certain to see you if you are in such a conspicious ; lace."

"What a coward you are, Laurie! I am not going to stick in this stupid stand all day, where I am lest in a crowd of women and nobody can see met. I tell you I mean to see. Decision run from that box-seat. Hang Colonel Hepburn? Take me across as

Very soon Miss Maitland had her heart's desire, and found herself installed in the much coveted seat of honor, where she was the cynosure of all admiring

The officers of the --th Light Dragoons vied with each other in making themselves agreeable to the beautiful and well-dressed guest whom Mr. Danman had just introduced to them.

They piled her with hot coffee and delicious cream-cakes, and with curious asductive fiquors calculated to warm the blood on a wintery afternoon; and they wrapped her feet in fur rugs and found cushions for her back, supplied her with the latest tips, and stood chattering round her on every available seat and step and wheel, whereever a man's body could manage to cling, for she was the most beautiful woman who had accorded their cosen during the

Lucille was very happy indeed. She liked fistery and she liked admiration + this was by far the meest part of the day to

All these men whose names she had hardly caught were really much more interesting to her than poor Laurie, of whom she had been getting rather tired. He was becoming very anxious about his race; and a little feeling of jealousy came over him too when he saw how completely she could overlook him smid this crowd of strangers.

An ubiquitous and well-known personage who went by the name of "Squash" was singing what were called "side spitting" comic songs beneath the coach. The listners were still laughing very heartly at his jokes—Lucilie much louder than any one.

When the song was over, she looked said the other day that you had round and could not see Laurie anywhere. Let in your upper story, and _______

He had slipped away quietly and gone back to the stand.

It was at that moment that her eyes suddenly met those of a handsome soldierlylooking gentieman with a gray moustsche who stood close below her. He raised his hat to her.

"How do you do, Miss Maitland? Do you remember me? My name is Hepburn. Sir Adrian Denerell introduced me to you two years ago. By the way, is Deverell down here to-day?"

Lucilie colored vividly with vexation, and murmured a searcely intelligible reply to the effect that Sir Adrian Doverell was in Scotland.

"In Scotland is hef Oh! I hope he is well? And how did you come here to day? Are you staying in the neighborhood?"

Luckily at that moderat the horses cantered past, and Lucille pretended not to hear the inconvenient questions.

'Oh, which is Decision?" she cried to the young officer by her side on the box. "Please show him to me! Blue and white stripes and cap, isn't he? On, here he comes! How handsome he looks! Do you think he will really win?"

"A foregone conclusion, I should say, Miss Mattand," answered her neighbor, who was looking earnestly through his glasses at the beautiful dark chestnut horse as he sped by with long awinging stricks, "They have been making a hot favorite of him. I hope you are fortunate enough to have backed him. The price is too long for me!"

Lucilie replied modestly that she stood to win a couple of sovereigns. When she glanced down towards her left again, Colonel Hepburn, to her intense relief, had moved away.

There was a long pause after the horses had gone to the starting-point. One of them was refractory and refused to start. Every eye was strained to the far away corner, now getting a little indistinct in the afternoon light, where the small knot of racers were clustered together behind the white flag of the starter. Murmurs arose on all sides—

"They are off! No, a false start—the flag hasn't fallen!" "Redeap turns round again!" "Now they are in line! No, that brute won't start!"

This sort of thing went on for sometime, and even Lucille, gasing through her raceglasses as earnestly as the rest, began to feel her heart best with the tension of sus-

At length a great shout arose, "They are off—they are off!" The beil rang, and a sudden hush fell upon the eager and expectant growd.

Decision came on steadily and well, keeping a good third over his first three fences, and then clearing the water-jump so significently that he came up neck to neck with the second horse, who packed slightly on landing beyond it.

A long weedy-looking bay animal was now leading easily; his pece was splended, but it was a question whether he would be able to keep it up twice round the race

"Kingfisher!" shouted the crowd of roughs below the coson as the bay horse galloped past first.

At the cry Lucilie turned nervously and anxiously to the man beside her; but he shook his head.

"Not a chance!" he muttered. "He won't stay the course; it lies between Toptmorn and Ducision."

And between Topthorn and Decision the race soon proved itself to be; for the bay could not keep it up for long, and at the very next hurdle he stumbled, lost ground, and came to the front no more. Topthorn was a magnificent galloper, but he blundered a little over his jumps; still when the horses turned the corner again and were on a straight line for the winningpost, Topthorn was leading easily and Decision was a good half-length behind him.

Lucilie felt a little uncomfortably; for she knew that Laurie had backed his own horse for considerably more than he could added to love, and that he hoped to win something like four thousand pounds. The crowd was shouting, "Topthorn wins!"

But the man again ressaured her.

"The invorite will pull it off yet. Topthorn looks distressed, but Decision is coming as straight as a dart for it."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

BOBBY—"Hay, Mister, have you rented your rooms, yet?" Elder Sister—"Hush, Bobby; you mustn't be so familiar." Mr. Softpate—"Oh, let me amuse him. I am yery fond of it its boys. What rooms, my ittle man?" Bobby—"I dunno, but als said the other day that you had rooms to let in your upper story, and—"

NOT QUITE PORGOTTHE.

MY SUSANNA J.

Not quite forgotten, though the years endeavor To fing a veil between thy soul and minet ? Deep in my beart thy memory liveth ever; By tears and smires unalter'd is thy shrine.

Not quite forgotien, oh thou first and faired Of all my day-dreams! thou who yet must be rusted in longest and still loved the dearest, Forgotten?—there is no such a word for thee!

No, not forgotten! for a chance resemblance A voice which rings as thine hath rung of of Will often bring thee back to my remembras And re-produce the past a thousand fold.

Paint as the fragrance of a flower long-gath Such is the love I bear thee; and no sin I count it, for its passion long since wither'd; And now 'tis love with nought of earth therein

Old Quin's Bank.

BY J. OHAMBERS.

NE MORNING I WAS walking stong the shore. The tide was ebbing, being already lower than I remembered it. leaving a broad stretch of glistening sand exposed. Projecting above the surface of the water were some timbers, and where they were left high and dry, curiosity led me to inspect them.

The beams were evidently very old; but being deeply embedded, I could not tell if they were part of some sunken vessel or the remains of a jetty.

Poking among the pebbles that were washed between them, I came to a cavity containing something round, which could be moved, but was too large to be easily withdrawn.

Setting to work with a piece of wood, I succeeded in clearing away the seaweed and stones which block up the hole, and at length dragged out a small barrel, strongly hooped with iron, and encrusted with limpet and mussel shells.

I carried the barrel to the beach, and seating myself in a cave proceeded to examine it. Forcing in one end with a heavy flint, I drew out an oil-skin bag-all the barrel contained.

Inside was a piece of sotled paper, on which the following words were scrawled in faded ink-

"We are driving on to the rocks with our rudder washed sway. I, Thomas Quin, do commit this to the sea. Let whoever finds it take it to my daughter Dorothy at Shingle Bay. No time for more."

On the other side of the paper was a rough drawing, of which at first I could make nothing.

This Thomas Quin was one of the bygone heroes of whom the fishermen in my part of the coast were never tired of spinning

Quin had been very successful in his ventures; but on his last voyage home from France with a valuable cargo, his vessel must have foundered in a terrible storm, for nothing had alles been heard of

This happened more than thirty years before. His wife, who was a cousin of my mother, had died giving birth to Dorothy; and the little girl, of whom Quin was passionately foud, was thus left sione in

She, however, was taken care of by some good friends in the village, who brought her up; and in course of time she was married to a young farmer, with whom things did not p an early death.

Dorothy Hendii was again left in an almost destitute condition, having now to support a little daughter. While in these straits, relief came in an unexpected manner.

One evening, a weather-beaten old satior tradged into the village, and making straight for the cottage, barst in on Dorothy and threw his whole stock of money into her lap. The neighbors crowded round; and it at once became known that her only brother Ben, who had long been given up for dead had returned.

After that there was no more want, for Ben was in receipt of a pension; and buying a small boat, he added to his income by fishing. My greatest delight was to visit my cousins and go out with Ben in his little craft.

I was almost as often at Shingle Bay as at home, and thus little Dorothy and I grew up together, and learnt to regard each other with more than cousinly affection. But I never mentioned the subject to my father, as I knew he would not allow me to marry a penniless girl.

These thoughts filled my mind as I sat pussing away at the drawing in my hand, and raised the hope that perhaps Quinwho, though known to be well off, had left no account of any savings-might have hidden away his money, and the paper might contain a cine to finding it. Hiding the barrel in a crevice of the cave, I mad my way to my cousin's hous

Shingle Bay, for which I was bound, was a deep luiet, shut in with high cliffs; the village consisting of one straggling street, built on the narrow strip of ground at the foot of the hill.

A rough stone quay ran out into the sea for the unloading of small vessels, which occasionally put in here, and protected the outlet of a little stream that ran planting down from a deep glen.

As I went down the steep path I saw Ben Quin in his bost busy overhanling some fishing-tackie. On hearing my footsteps, he looked up and cried out in a lusty voice-

"Well, I'm downright glad to see you, George! I'm going to hancel these new lines this morning. We'll go up to the Cottage and have a bit of something to est before westert."

Ben was a short thickset man, with a square good-humored face, the color of mahogany; and although getting on in years, was protty well as sturdy as ever. We walked up the village, and soon came to the little thatched cottage, and entering its oresper-covered porch, were warmly greeted by Mrs. Hendil and Dorothy.

I told the story of finding the paper, and they all crowded round me as I took it out; Dorothy leaning over my shoulder in her eagerness, read it aloud.

Her mother was greatly affected on heared this last message from the sea, while Ben had to clear his threat a good many times before he could recover his com-

When they had got over the excitement, saked them if they could make anything out of the rough drawing on the back of the paper; but after carefully examining it, they came to the conclusion it was some old chart which had been used in the hurry of the moment.

It represented an irregular oval, with the cardinal points marked, in the southeast part of which was a curious arrangement of five circles, the middle one being larger than the others.

We sat discussing the discovery, specuia ing on the strange event so long that the fishing expedition was quite put on one side.

"I well remember," said Mrs. Hendil, "that on the night in which father went on his last voyage, he promised me he would give up the sea when he came back. 'l'm getting too old for the work, Dolly,' he said, as I sat on his knee before going to bed; 'and bosides, it's a risky business. If this run is successful, I've made up my mind to retire from the trade altogether. Anyway, I've laid up a mug neet for you, my pretty—It's in a bank,' I remember he added with a laugh. Dorothy and I have searched over his papers again and again, but have found nothing relating to any savings, so I never could quite make out what he meant.

Dorothy's mother set looking sadly into the fire for a long time, during which none of us wentured to break the silence.

As I did not wish to be late in getting home, I was soon obliged to say good-bye; and on my way out came across a bunk ing young fellow, who seemed to be hanging about the cottage.

He siunk off on seeing me, but not before recognised him to be Will Jackson, the son of a cossignardman stationed at the er end of our village. He was a lazy, good-for-nothing fellow, who had been one royage, but finding the work too hard at sea, preferred idling about at home.

That night I dreamed that Old Quin visited me and caused me to accompany him over the bills; but what his object was I could not make out, for I swoke just as he seemed to be on the eve of disclosing something that was weighing heavily on his spirits. Though I courted sleep again, in the hope of taking up the broken thread of my dream, I was doomed to disappointment. After this, I employed my leisure in rambling along the cliffs with a copy of the chart in my hand, trying to find anything at all recembling it in which to search. Two or three years, however, passed away without any discovery being made, and I had come to regard the whole thing as almost hopeless,

One afternoon, Ben Quin and I had rowed inshore after a successful day's fishing, and hanled the boat up the beach of a little unfrequented bay called Filat Gap.

As we had been hard at work in the sun and were tired and hot, we seated ourselves on a flat rock in the abadow of the cliffs. and after refreshing ourselves, not talking ALOUE COOL

Of late, I had relaxed my investigations

but some remark of Sen's made me take out my copy of the chart, and the sight of this called to mind the barrel which I had hidden away.

The cave was not far off. Telling Ben I would not be long, I started up, and running over the sand, soon returned with the barrel. I took out the oliskin bag, and ou carefully examining it, was surprised to find that it contained an inner pocket. In this was a piece of parchment which had secaped my notice before.

To my great joy, it proved be a more elaborate drawing of the chart or plan scrawled on the paper, with some written directions besides. Ben est looking on in wonder, when I shouted:

"It's all right, Ben. We'll find your father's treasure; it's as plain as a pikestaff bers. You'll be all rich now ---

"Whist!" said Ben at that instant, putting his finger to his tips. "I believe there's some one listening in the gap up above. It'll be uncommon awkward if you're overheard."

Thrusting the plan into my breast-pocket, I ran lightly up the steep narrow path and caught a glimpee of a man hurrying away. Though it was only a giance, it brought my heart into my mouth, for the man was young Jackson, who had some time before rone back to see.

He looked back on gaining the top, and seeing me following, he turned round and grumbled out in a half-sulky way:

Well, how you startled me, to be sure, by rushing up so sudden-like."

I looked at him without speaking, as he

"I think you might give a poor shipwrecked fellow a heartier welcome, though we didn't use to be friends over yonder, jerking his thumb towards Shingle Bay .-

"I've been through adeal of rough weather since then, and don't bear no ili-will. Let bygones be bygones, say L."

From the shuffling manner in which he spoke, I felt sure he had been watching us and had overheard my incantious remarks; nowever, as there was no help for that now, I cut him short, and turning abruptly away, hurried back to Ben.

Throwing the keg into the bost, in a few minutes we had her affoat, and rowed off round a projecting mass of rock where we were quite out of sight and hearing from

"I hope that eneaking secondrel didn't hear all, Ben," said I as we rested on our oars. "It's lucky be betrayed his whereabouts before I had gone any further; so let us hope there's no great harm done, after all."

"What's done can't be helped," quoth Ben philosophically. "But, as you haven't told me yet what you've found out. I can't give an opinion."

"Well, Ben, you remember that your sister said her father told her he had a snug nest put away in a bank, but that she could find no account of any money. This set me thinking, and I came to the conclusion that the paper I at first found in the keg referred to this money, which most likely had been hidden away. The drawing on this parchment makes me pretty nearly sure that if there is anything at all, it's in Dane's Camp. What I've got to do is to hit upon the exact spot."

Ben had been looking intently at me while I was explaining, and now gave vent to his feelings in a long whistle.

"From what father said to Dolly-and he wasn't the man to make a loke-it's sartin he'd put by something; and, to my mind, these charts were not drawn for nothing. But after all these years, it's likely it may have been found out; still it's worth trying; and if we can light on the place and get the money, we'll manage to fetch it away sale enough, I warrant."

Next morning at daybreak I was out: and taking my way over the fields, wet and heavy with dew, came to the headland that rose in a bold sweep from the level land

Right ahead, looking near in the brightness that now overspread the sky, but in reality some three miles away, appeared the low dark lines which marked the ancient bank of Dane's Camp. Going on at a rather brisk pace, I soon got over the intervening ground, and climbing the crumbling old earthwork, commenced my search.

Though broken down in some places, and overgrown with dense patches of gorse and fern and the graceful trailing boughs of the bramble, the old ditch and bank retained much of their original form; the space enclosed being roughly square, three sides were entrenched, the fourth being the sheer edge of the cliff, which here rose to a great height.

Commencing at the nearest corner, I walked round the top, the parchment in my hand, and reached the fartherest ex. tremity of the comp. I was unable to discover anything that corresponded to the plan, which consisted of an oval with tae points of the compass shown.

At the south-east part were four strales, enclosing a larger one marked with a cross, while an arrow pointed to the seuth indicated fifty yards.

I looked carefully for any object from which to measure fifty paces; but what had seemed simple on first seeing the drawing, appeared hopeless in practice now.

I sat on the bank, trying to get over my disappointment, and, to amuse mysaif, be-gan rolling pieces of fint down the hill, watching as they bounded away till they were stopped by the furne bushes that fring ed the path peneath.

Having exhausted all the stones within reach, I tried to unearth a large flint which protruded from the turf, but found it a ard job, till, exerting all my strength, it came out at last, and slipping from my grasp, rolled down the steep slope and grashed into the busbes.

At that moment I heard a footstep coming towards me, and was turning round to see who it was, when, in the hole from which I pulled the stone, I spied a gold coin, and had just time to snatch it, when a scrambling noise caused me to close my fingers upon it, and the next instant the un welcome form of young Jackson stood over me.

"Hillol" said he, with what was meant to be an arch smile; "you're taking the air early this morning, shipmet."

Prudently overcoming a strong desire to send him headlong down the hill, I took no notice of his pleasantry, but, getting up, commenced to waik homeward.

I hoped Jackson would take the hint, and not trouble me with his presence; but it suited him to accompany me; and as I could not very well shake him off, I had to put the best face possible on the matter. All this time I had kept the gold piece in my hand, not daring to look at it, and on the first opportunity I quietly slipped it into my pocket.

We walked on silently for some time, when Jackson broke out with:

"I had such a rum dream last night: I thought I was digging for a potful of money some one had hid in the ground. After working for a long spell, I fluds it, when up comes and calls out 'Haives!'-'All right,' said I; 'that's all fair and square.' So we parts the lot between na."

There was a pause at this, and then I rather awk wardly remarked-

"What of that? It was only a dream." "Suppose," said he, looking sideways at me, 'you was to find anything, and I was to come along, of course you'd do the same, en?" - putting on a simple and friend-

"As it isn't very likely such a thing will happen, I don't see the good talking about I was forced to say.

"Now, look here," said he, changing his manner and speaking in a builying tone. "I bear you and Quin the other day talking on the beach down yonder about the paper you found and what you expected it meant. My old granded was a mate of Quin's father in many a run of goods, and he often said the old man had stowed away a rich cargo, which sin't seen the light since, I reckon. It you like to take me as pardner, well and good; if not, look out, for you'll come off all the worse, I can tell you."

I was in her stage o od with thin; for it did not strike me at first that Jackson pretended to know more than he really did.

As I did not ans ver, Jackson gave me another threat, and then dropped benind, but followed me home at a distance.

After breakfast, as there was nothing to keep me at home, I got leave from my father to stop for a night or two at my cousin's.

Jackson was not in sight when I got out again, not expecting me so soon, I suppose; so I quickly gained the hill-top, and after walking some distance, sat down where there was no fear of being overlooked, and taking out the coin, proceeded to examine it carefully.

It was as big as two of our guineas and as it had a hole bored through it, had evidently been used as a charm. On one side were acratched the letters T. Quin.

Hastily getting up, I started at a run, and did not stop till I came to the place where I had found it. The bank on this part was thickly covered with bushes, and now I noticed for the first time that they almost hid a low mound.

I made out its shape to be oval; and turning my face to the south, I took fifty long paces, which brought me to a large mos covered stone, which did not rise above the level of the ground, so that I had not noticed it before.

y

y

to

to

P

ad.

1

784

riil

put

the

and

TAT

nd,

to my

my

out

one;

fter

ere

and

ine

ent

and 1616

WAS

w L

nost

and

filly

arge

had

A huge bush overshedowed the place where I had discovered the coin, and this proved to be at the south-east part of the oval mound corresponding to the positions of the five circles in the chart. It struck me that old Quin must have dropped the gold piece while working at this spot.

All excitement, I pushed on as fast as I could to Shingle Bay, and found Ben at home. Taking him seide into the garden, I told him of my discovery, and showed him the coin, which he had remembered having seen his father wear.

When I spoke of what Jackson had told me, he looked rather grave; but brightening up after a bit, said he had a plan to deceive him. Lighting his pipe, and seeming to be greatly assusted thereby, he went into details.

"Now, as that young scamp guesses so much about this affair, it's my opinion the best way will be to get the treasure, what-ever it be, to-night. We can smuggle a pickax and shovel down to the boat in an old sall when it falls dark, Young Jackson is sure to be along this way after you; and if you keep indoors until the evening, he'll most like be hanging about all day. When we go out in the boat, he'll think there's something in the wind; and as he won't have the pluck, for all his stoutness, to tackle us by himself, he's almost sure to go back and get the help of that precious cousin of his. The moon will be up by the time we land the tools and are ready to work; so, all things considered, it'll go hard with us if we can't be the first in."

We followed ciosely Ben's programme; and, as he predicted, Jackson was to be seen watching us; and as soon as we were affoat, he hurried away in the direction of his home.

With the tools on our shoulders, we leaped on shore at the gap, and making our boat fast, we tolled up the steep path, and came to the camp just as the moon appeared over the bill; and by its light we set to work with all speed.

We cleared away the earth under the bush, and had made a good-sized hole, when the pick struck with such force against a stone as almost to overturn Ben, who was wielding it.

"There's a rock or something as hard here, George," said he ruefully, rubbing his arm and resting his back against the

I shovelled away for dear life, and throwing out a lot of loose earth, laid bare a large boulder.

"Oh, that's all, is it?" eaid Ben. "I was afraid I'd struck a solid cliff."

With the aid of a crowbar we prised the stone, and dragging it out, disclosed a bundle of dry forms and heather; and eagerly removing this, we found a snug nest with five keeps lying in it. "Stop a bit," said Ben. "A little more light won't be amiss,"

He stooped down and lit a lantern under cover of the bush. By it we could see the barrels were arranged in the same order as the circles in the chart.

Ben dragged out the first, and giving it a shake, declared it to be full of French brandy; another proved to be similar. He then laid hold of the middle keg, but found it so heavy that he could not move it.

"Hillo!" said be, in an excited whisper; "this is the one worth taking care off From the weight, it must be gold. We must get it out of this before Jackson returns, for I've an idea he won't be long."

We dug a trench through the bank, and so were able to roll out the heavy keg. his took some time, for now the was mounting up the sky.

Happening to look over the camp, I could distinguish two dark forms making towards us. Seeing there was not a moment to lose, I quietly told Ben they were coming, and with his help, forced the keg over the edge, and sent it rolling swiftly down the slope where I had amused myself that morning. I heard it erach through the bushes at the bottom, and then all was still.

Whispering to Ben, I replaced the two brandy barrels, and shovelled back a lot of the earth, managing this so quickly, that when Jackson and his coustn came upon us, all trace of the barrels had disappeared. We went on digging as if we were not aware of their presence until they jumped down the bank.

"So you're eaught, my fine fellow," said Jackson, commencing to scrape away at the loose earth, and in a little time dragging out one of the kegs. "As my father's substitute, I order you in the name of the law, to hand over these 'ere smuggled goods."

Men roundly refused, but afterwards, on my entreety, consented to the arrangement. The other kegs were dragged out; and the two men continued to dig deeper, but found nothing more, seeming to have no suspicion of the trick we had pinyod for each at length shouldered a barrel and trudged off silently the way they had come

We waited until they were out of sight; then getting our precious keg into a strong basket, and placing some fish on the top to conceal it, we landed at the quay, and carried it between us, with some difficulty, to

We said nothing till after breakfast, and then, with boiled doors, we forced in the head of the barrel, disclosing to our wondering eyes a glittering mass of gold h when emptied out on to the floor made a perfect billook of guiness. When we recovered our breath, we counted the treasure; but I am atraid to tell how much we made it, lest my verseity should be doubted.

The neighbors were very curious to know the cause of my consins' sudden rise in the world; and though young Jackson never heard snything about the fifth keg, yet he evidently in some way connected my cousins' prosperity to Dance' Camp.

A CHAT WITH A CHIROMANT.

FTER AN interview with a Graphotogist or student of character from handwriting whose theories, I have since tested and found satisfactory, I ventured to put myself in communication with a professor of Chiromanoy, or Palmistry, with a view to gather from him some facts concorning that popular, so-called, science. 1 may add that I went as a sceptic. I had no ideas and had no prejudices concerning Paimistry when I first entered upon the consideration of it.

The servant ushered me into a nicely furnished room, in which the Palmist was seated writing, and I at once opened ray

"There is no quackery in it at all," said he, in reply to my dublous question. Many people term Palmistry fortune tel? ing.' It is nothing of the kind. Chiro mancy is simply a deduction of character of events, in consequence of interpreting certain lines and signs of the human bend."

"Then," said I, "do you mean to tell me that by looking at my hand—my palm, perhaps—you can tell my disposition and my tastes?"

"It is not necessary to look at your paim for that. I can see you have tastes in art; are practically inclined: obstinate, impuisive, a tendency to sentimentality in life and in religion. You have an excellent ear for music, and dance well in time. You love melody in music in preference to the classic style. You are generous, quick tempered, rather plucky: chatty, proud, fond of amusement: have plenty of test, and an inquiring mind!"

"This is ridiculous," was my reply; "you have studied my character from some private source!"

"Nothing of the kind, I seeure you," was the Palmiet's answer. "I can give you reasons presently. But are you aware of any secret, any love affair, for instance, in your life-sny event which I could not have possibly have heard of?"

"There is one incident which I shink is impossible that you could have heard of. You might have been told of an engagement, but one thing I am sure you mannot

"Weil, let me see your palm this time, and if I mention that incident you will accept my sesurance, upon honor, that I have no knowledge of you, and you will perhaps believe in Palmistry. Now let me see. You were a delicate child; had weak eyes in your youth; at about four years old you had a fail on your head, which aftected you for awhile."

I started: the Palmist stopped and said-"Have I burt your feelings?"

"No, you have only surprised me. The neident you would not have known was that fail. It was from a loft when I was bout four and a haif."

"Then you are estisfied I am not an impositor?" he said smiling. "Shall I proseed to tell you that you are rather a firt, have a too easy-going manner of doing business, and are likely to be taken in! You are too trusting. Your younger days were happy. You went into a business about nineteen; changed it at about thirtyone; and as your imagination is vivid, and your Head Line connected with it, you are I venture to may, a writer of imaginative literature. You are rather irresolute; at times obstinate, though; have had bad headaches, many worries, and you are decidedly a favorite with the opposite #3XI'

"I give it up!" was my reply; "you are correct-wonderfully correct! It is mar-veilous! But hew do you know all this?" "By observation and practice. I am only an amateur, not a spratemional of this dangerous art-dangerous in unskilled hands—and seidom I predicate anything for fear of alarming people."

"Then you can forteil events?"
"Probable events. Many times my prediction have come true I can refer you to the people if you like to make inquiries. Predictions which I have made and forgot ten have been recalled to me by the people concerned, or by friends who have noted the case and remembered the prediction when it was fulfilled."

"Then you can prognosticate death?"

"Within certain limits. yes. We can tell within a few years (a couple or three years) when a person will die if he or she goes on as they are likely to go on. I have done so truly. It is so with illness also. We can tell So-and-So, if he will not mend bis ways or give up hard work, he will suffer; of course, he will accept the offer and alter too. It is perfectly true! Watch your own lines, and you will see the changes pisiniy. Some secidents one cannot avoid: fal s or some such. I remember warning an officer of injury to his head 'at about forty.' He laughed and assured me that he was just forty and had no such accident. 'He would have it,' I said; and in three months after he had a bad fail playing 'polo,' and sent home word to tell me I had been correct."

"Astonishing!" I exclaimed; "but how is it done? What are the indications?"

"They are many and varied. Some fingers are pointed, some square, some flattened, some rounded. These mean, respectively, the dreamy-artistic, the useful, the energetic, and the artistically inclined, with reflection and usefulness, roughly speaking. Each joint gives character: the top joint ideatism, the next usefulness, and the tuird energy. (The divine, the intellectual, and the worldly.) Thick-jointed fingers are the typical of the love of good living.' The third joint is the sensual one. And so on."

"But how could you tell that I had a fall?" I asked.

"By the little white indentation on your Line of Life (which runs round your thumb). You were a shy, nervous child, and fond of reading; you see those lines do not separate very soon. Those cross lines means delicacy, and the eyes were weak. That line running scross your hand under the fingers and nearest to them is your Heart Line. It is rather broken: you are affectionate. It is out into and throws out other lines beneath it: you have had some serious flirtations and at least two engagements to be married."

"Well, am I married now?"

"You are; you married at about nine and twenty, after an engagement which asted some time-a year or more. You have had five children-or wix, perhapsthere they are, you see one is faintly shown. They are chiefly boys; the girls are less strongly marked; two girls, I should may, are stive: Your Fate Line, which rune up the centre of your hand there, tells me you changed your occupation at certain times. You will have trouble and worry, I fear, in later life, and delicate health if you are not careful."

So saying, the Chiromani rose and said, after a pause.

"You see, there are lines on everybody's palms not always alike; 'no two pairs of hands are exactly allkel' Your own hands differ; the right band shows the shaping of the life by your own wills the left the patural fate' of its owner. An illness mark on the right hand is indicative of iiiness consequent on our own tastes or fully. If on the left it is probably hereditary, or unavoidable. If on both, very severe and dangerous.' "I am afraid I have trespassed on your time very much," I began as the Paimlet paused. "Well, I'm sorry I cannot spare time to give you more reasons. Study the lines on your bands. Consuit a manual of Palmistry and look at other people's hands. They will tell your great deal, and the hands never ile. You may be in error. The owners may deny the soft impeachment, or the hard impeacement, but the signs are there, and cannot be effected. They are written in indelible characters, and unless the characters change, the marks will be more and more accentuated. Good-day!" With this I was forced to be content. But the Palmist was correct in his interpretations, in this as well as in a subsequent interview.

HAPPY it were for all of us if we bore prosperity as well and as wisely as we bear adverse fortune.

Scientific and Useful.

INDIA-RUBBER SPONGE.—A new kind of sponge has been invented, made from India rubber. The immitation is said to be perfect in appearance, but softer than real sponge, and its power of absorption greater.

To Stop A SLEEDING WOUND .- It is known at the hospitals that the parchleride of iron immediately arrests bleeding. Paper enturated with the perchloride of iron is now generally sold by the Parisian druggista. As a plaster, a piece of it wrapped round a cut finger, or put on a sarger wound, stope blood instantly.

SULPRURIO ETHER. - A Cordean doctor, has, is is asserted, constructed a motive apparatus or propeller of twenty-horse power, which is worked by sulphuric ether, result which the doctor anticipates will realize a saving of 65 per cent. of the combustible material at present employed for setting machinery in motion.

FOR COLOGNE WATER .- The following formula for cologne water won the prize offered by a London firm among over two hundred competitors: Essence of bergamot, 2 drachma; essence of lemon, 1 drachm; oil of neroll, 20 drops; oil of origanum, 6 drops; off of rosemary, 20 drops; alcohol, treble-distilled, 1 pint; orange-flower water,

To LOOMEN A RUSTED SCREW. - One of the simplest and readlest ways of loosening a rusted screw, is to apply heat to the head of the screw. A bar or rod of iron, flat at the end, if reddened in the fire and applied for two or three minutes to the head of the rusty screw, will, as soon as it heats the screw, render the latter's withdrawal as easy by the screw driver as if the crew had only recently been inserted.

FLOORING TILBS AND SLABS -The immense accumulation of refuse in the slate quarries has induced an inventor to convert it into paving tiles and other useful articles. The siate, with a certain proportion of river sand and pitch, all reduced to powder, is heated by steam, then poured into moulds of the form required, and subjected to hydraulic pressure. The tiles or slabs are then cooled in water, and the upper surfaces ground smooth if required.

Farm and Garden.

BUTTER.-An expert says if butter be broken when cold the broken parts should resemble the broken parts of cast-iron or teel, and also the same of rock formations.

HORBST FRUIT.-Whenever you find a man's name on a package of truit that is invariably honestly packed, that name will be worth a good deal of money to its owner.

BUN AND LIGHT .- House plants should have as much sun and light during the winter mouths as possible; admit air whenver the temperature is not too cold, say 10 degrees Fahrenheit in the open air.

CORNSTALES .- Do not throw the cornstalks away, but pass them through a cutter and use them in the manure heap as absorbents, so as to allow them to quickly decompose. If they are tender, out them and feed them to the stock.

PERIOD OF HATCHING .- As a general ule, for the batching of objekens 21 days are required; for partridges, 24 days; for pheasants, 25 days; for guinea hens, 25 days; for common ducks, 28 days; for pea fowls, 28 days; for turkeys, 28 days; for burbary ducks, 30 days, and for geese, 30 dava.

LIQUIDS AND SOLIDS .- To save manure properly means to save both liquids and solids. When the liquids are lost the most valuable constituents of fertility pass away with it. Nearly all farmers are careful to eave the solid portions, but quite a number take no interest in the care of the liquids. The use of some kind of absorbent, and the frequent saturation of the solids with the liquids will not only prevent loss but also improve the condition of the solid portions.

FEED LOTS .- A feed lot is too small that compels animals to est from the fith. A small lot with a feeding floor will answer the purpose much better than a larger one without a floor. The soil part of the small lot may be covered with straw or other litter to the comfort of the hogs and the profit of the owner. Exercise in working this over is of great benefit to the hogs, and makes a valuable lot of manure for the farmer's use.

"I CAN'T imagine how you can dislike work; to me it's real enjoyment," said the lather to his lazy son. "Yes, pa," was the guileless response; "but I don't want to give myself up wholly to pleasure.'

PHILADELPHIA, PRINCIANY & 1800.

TRRES OF SUSSESSIPTION.

---I they the Transmission & cligities than Fren, and than to gretter up of to chapter time time, and time to present up of Awk.

A different to the te man be made at any time duting ---tothe a se mediates and its sens hertuger me of the ---Street he Photol Church, Photol Nices, Strate Church.

A I was a common prisonage and publicapproaches by a bri the separate sents. or tenant truptions APPROXISE BY THE PERSONNEL IN THE PARTY.

Address an branch or

THE SATTERNIT STRAISS POST

Patradulmana Pa

The histogram without the manage and

A PREMITTING TO SUBSCRIBERS

The Pure will work as a present a seerect patents who secure us $6 W for one words to address operation in automorphism of characters in sections of the contract of the co and and several in manager transfer party The name of woman we have menerous to secmen manage or the ent apparently and participation Applications with price, with white PRACES BEEN TOOK NO PROTECT beautiful direction of program were more the acoust 10 a by response much files acriginal will also done pour and green, entermorne a mante waters december de also desables a vest graces the busin were a referred applicable advertishing conflue a gaps In the guidine of me wid-line trans-C'he senidas de menting mad alse tromeand petropol at potents with its stripe office office at principally instructes make the the world in fast of life and business the the many with present present Animis have minimis has a gramma. Real commend of many of many and a the segment clerch book here generated; grant of the triber office of a world their felant who has ten norme spent the money and artists to being there "speaker is tree." Name minimum smile to cre-ry manages contrappataments manual manual for other mancon and chapterdomes a the other free stolds steed to Me to Africa to the areamentation a service a missing story never came from the handers as ar

Pilmin, a the Pan Spinnilli Communicat was need need the serve and served between structure, in a principle part is much maximum line.

With manife in R. R. to This Trace cape, want

Bernring mart Mreupiten.

-----of expense money of design the sell se has optiondend sen in a and close in the dec-sea.

the grade and make tillings asserts to month absorbance was sombility or the which the party was the property of the the first the advanced market is an appropriate the med on system him so in the thinks so being to his out the solar sen a seem a read its also account his fee en w. objection ' home an inverse in the stre of in face of merel dut sound the appropriate team. I we tree ---- in beliefer seriores in descript, in it. the section with medicing riches at mile Spinish of Spinish and Spinish die and metter britished we obtain the set where WALLES IN THE P. P. P.

Some A it needs to beleatened a life The an health an mor manning that the traths, but the pity is it these balanhands are like the leave, waim, Robsesh made to inc. like solic pair like the biss. on hower an matter a daint ton to while the infrançois rabbi hypother the broke and the trick of the false metal and the disguised diagrace was discovered.

Them happe a qualitar book ware his

So with our own lives. We choose such and such a path-such and such a manner being, and as time passes and the seed ripens into the fruit, we find by unalterable experience what is to be our enduring

The riot and dissipation of youth, for rample, has a harvesting for old age not of the most sufficing character.

Time look and with time, health and money and more or less of repute, leave gape in the soul's palace through which the keen winds whistle and rave.

From pride and a haughty temper, as enming to !teelf the kingship of men, comes inviation but not supremacy. This is the garnering got from that self-sown plant of personal giverification.

He to whom ay mpathy with others is an anworthy evadescension, who demands homage rather than love, and whose pride brooks soliber evaluations nor remos straters, is one who must be content to live without true affection and to die without roal regret; but he is not necessarily compeneated by the reality of the superiority he has an stren mously believed in. Perhaps at the and of all he learns his mistake.

Organic with this is generalized ill some ora Arkidw sourcementary be-winted what as decides the general-make villate tiarget era delde ensess in antidisserve racks, oil community which are treachery.

to lett saidt to beek ver e me elet mine to the world, and wheren't the probecome are necessariled good company and an inited citation gravates

Superactions which hithers: had been un saided now amount and action by the soon fugues or the bushestimes of the training, He on his track, as defended stations and brooken columns mark the track of a deponent antions turned the other was ed lads or becomes stop eds bee denot fod bene eiftel sets bene worden larter entigene מנושרים שו ביותר ביותר ביותר של מיינו dealt with a the mane was and a fund of evil above to exist where a nothing but a persona repulsionamente e operantes territor to pieces and not a moral toli belonging to is franch is native as when ther are not iradinosi, and the whole living drama transai que lifer se munit trans bram bits ids has jointeen that expectitions makes one but to the unapproperties of the improvement ment into the state of the armin Built which the compenintly II-mitteed minush are and harries

And the harmer. Wal, the harmer is one of universe, suprairies, a unconsensed distress o guin shrinking from dangerous

The about tour libra; the ligral nearly tion the frank dislike his drashis turns the letteriff from hits station to it waste the other of a merymine—the fame of a

Street three with heapt with him wiver happie is rathern then in the for that cen intimecy and his televerness made and are the most and the diff decais b resided; from no beauty

He maps as he some. He some il mattin and he reare repulsion. He acres surman You're ret hirdel phintstire it poleonous unit instrument alemaks and de regre feet THE PERSON discovering admirate dynkicky dreaming saile out that provides to fight to the out to take on plant and a green says dr no was two hom under me home and when five un utget a that want un

The India agreeming of the 'spill impreto the rightly Americaline of them behind han slanderen riditulen satiriate

30 m m a m am 1 m am faiti an trate igrail an untigatness cinnerily and grapmatity we what francis the like and me have will result to write the investor metant in sec talling, british to to by the politic mak a true and

I would the reverse weedled rage to modified an of ag wil fin a duning ore an Sestment, the note analy 6. mag an the sherious trian a none

Scars records ar cites calles "mess" by gill stand of the west little was a seemen the with the trade because the who he not his hones mention to that Injury bein sen was will be the shape pula three houses a row are pleasure. M. when a war undersales. To be terminal a dam on vaste way a thinking that a market termiwill help an her to the bapuster man meteoric more includy, over wore made on, an half one on heat with distance by names with tal names. Why absolu an abatterine prevent when 4th mounting they a ag me also afters, treatment to extortion by pursuing the opposite course; or open the door for endless petty disputes on points differently understood by the same parties? It has a very suspicious look when a person is unwilling to come to plain terms in a business matter.

THE instant the head is laid on the pillow is that in which conscience delivers its de crees. It it has conceived any evil design, it is surrounded with thorns. The softest down is hard under the restless head of the wiched. In order to be happy, one must be on good terms with one's pillow, for the nightly reproaches it can make must be heard; yet it is never so delicious, so tran quil, as after a day on which one has performed some good act, or when one is conscious of having spent it in some useful or substantial employment.

No man is a gentleman who, without provocation, would treat with incivility the numblest of his species. It is a vulgarity for which no accomplishments of dress or address can ever stone. Show us the man who desires to make every one happy around him, and whose greatest solicitude is never to give fast cause of offence 'o any one, and we will show you a gentleman by nature and by practice, though he may never have worn a suit of broadcloth, nor even beard of a lexicon.

Ir you would be free from sin, fly temp tation : he that does not endeavor to avoid the one cannot expect Providence to de send him from the other. If the first sparks of all were quenched, there would be no fame ; for how can be kill who dares not be angry, or be an adulterer in act, that does not transgress in desire? How can be he perjured who lears an oath; or he defrand that does not allow himself to

It is a common and favorite notion with many people that the morning air is the purest, most bracing; but the very oppoalso is the fact. The air is more fall of dam reven. Ing. mham, at about suprise. which the sex however soon dissipates Softwe engaging in anything like exercise more in the early morning out of doors. a b conducte to bealth to take a warm Led ad of for a testagend it section in the

Every duty, even the least, involves the whole principle of obedience; and little duties make the will dutical that it to sop rile und revented to ober Limbe e bediences man that great. The half resend of duty s full of probation and discipline; it trains the will, bear and conscience. The com mores: life may be build perfection. The duties of home are a discipline for the man Salar of Bios. Pos.

Re Pulle hours is an the greater became we are lot to assess ourselves. The blank form is easy to un and led to our honor to til up. De net samper with the paper, sor no: there is a recoulding officer who will assuming your acheditio, who knows all when were presented for as you who have age most desirables granteness and we bound it do

There the from what a Tearthan, with 7.25 well and sell. Amon Darrison in some manne in what mate; and i if the new firmly base to weath. there will your after his would speed it the frum de Hou.

Mest when a restraining to was so will mallies movement that great ability to present died on law as denderal titles

To ambren the whole up now with the sounds beautifu. but we miss begin with the individua, the nearman gramme ware over when necessaries & St. Jan Lying to painters than tolerar

To more measures is to some elemprocesses to do them have these to vio them two much

יושל ביו מו מים מים ביום ביותו מים יוצות wall bent to bear ten to I shot were

The World's Happents

A Pennsylvania baby has been born and Infant burglars to the number of a dozen

According to the "American Art Printer"

A lad of 18 in Bay Shore, L. L. has be-me violently incane through the excessive use of

Of all the ailens who took out letters of extersituation to England hast year only three were Chief Justice Putter's old tin sign is to blo sid us gailend caseviate to the old of After New York dinners now the gueste sing or speak-into the phonograph and bear their own voices returned from it. A lad named Simons is the pride or Santa Crus county, California. He is 17 years eld, stands 6 feet 3% inches high, and weighs 200 pounds. A colored man named Redick, of Bridgewater, this State, claims to be 123 years old. He en-Mrs E. E. Page of St. Louis, gave birth last Priday to four well-developed fumale bables, all of whom are alive and give thir promise of surviving.

Prince T. K y Kubah Mirsa, who is a first counts of the Shah of Persia, has been sent to Siberia by the Russian Government for distributing Near Virginia City, Mev., the other night an unlooky yearling colt floundered into a snow drift and stack fast. Then some lacky coyotes came along and had supper.

A London paper tells of a dog which, having run away from its new master, traveled to miles over an unknown country to its old home, arrived there the day after starting.

A post mortem examination revealed in the stomact of a valuance buil terrise that died end-denly in Revers, Mass, several gards of string, birned matches and a cigarette nodder.

Chicag payercians recently laid bare the spital column of a boy and removed a dist of blood and now believe that he will recover from the effect of a stroke of paralysis, which he suffered Christian Day.

In Mexico pecule distrust a young physocian until he has had a noupes of years per-giou. Then they make an investory of Hispaniersa, and if he has cured more than he has killed they recognize

A C printati man war aus p eserved s vessed of MD railroad accordants happening to this Nailry in the past year. Elsos dead only statemen out of the lost accounts soon common buyons homan

Tame of four pears weighing twenty possiós and times couras french-cos possiós; possió fentiera inches unas, sod pesches restret trans inchesta incressión como . Tomo are produc-While Mr and Mrs. Jacob E comberg conversible than a hearth of worlding in Change the school night. It is, Resemblent, who had account in the best of less it and spirits, but subtenly him the arms of her bravened, and their almost immediately. Vertici et a enegoer's jung in Delavure

NALES, N. Y. The pure Ents that Comment or his least through the influence of Lega-ciary conserve of his same while this ma-

A by Newsqueined is Alinghers City. his distriction between a market of the service of

The cities is weath the receipt in the bethe world in the highest Description Common St. Pro-tem. It was becomed the many and control the first of Kamenara Pobolst by the letter of a limit medicanal to receive many between a new or the same which

A ch of Nort in West Manufester N H. too. Noted may titled the time a human being Or have manufact, and take greened written the and your or however as to look agreement. Then are been been some former, proposed that there may be a look had a look had printed and then some after the some of the look had been the look had been after the look had been also been after the look had been also been after the look had been also be

Louis James anders of Philamit L halter communities to present before the Cast.

Distring accorded the pairtie he said, with the control of the parties of the pairties and according to the pairties of the pairties and according to the pairties and a ternian unitating and excitoguishing the spin of

A Sor blee (O) home name! After Competent having a prescription for the minute. Processor just it frommobe. The labore thrown was to a full contract contract to the same of compact and contracting on the formation of the formation of

A NO DESIGNATION OF THE PARTY AND THE PARTY A TORE DESCRIPTION OF SHEET AND ADDRESS OF A PARTY AND ADDRESS OF A which there have consent the most title time on the control of the

A war days of the familian Berry 274 to to the office the a president a Blaster come & the brisking and property and property and the control of

A Nicity regard on the world for reserved A The state of the s the principal age of the term of the second a site the observation has at our above their

A WIRE

BY ALPHROS BOLLING.

Shall I wish for you, sweet friend, That the rose of beauty fair, Now manting on your cheek, Shall bloom forever there?

Be yours a life of wirtue rare All free from pain and wos Attended by the purest joys The human beart can know

And when life's pfigrimage is o'er. All earthly ties are riven,
I then would earnest ask for you
A brighter home in Heaven.

There, there agaid the pearly street And shining course above, Fore'er attune your guiden lyre in songs of joy and love.

Two to a Quarrel.

BY PHYLLIS.

T had been an ideal marriage! Every body had been delighted with it; and occurring as it did just at the close of last season, had been considered a very fitting wind up to it. Both the principal actors in the fashionable drama had hoses of friends, and the general rejoidings over the happy event had been, therefore, not only loud, but deep.

Lady Fiors Travers was an orphan, young, lovely, lively-a little too lively perhaps-and an heiress into the bargain, on quite a grand scale. Sir Frederick Blount was an orphan too, young, handsome and quite abominately rich for a man whose heart had gone out to an heiress; and there hadn't been the slightest doubt about the amount of heart thrown into the affair; two people so utterly and entirely in love had seldom (every one agreed) been seen.

It was the most deliciously romantic thing all through. Society was charmed. There wasn't a flaw in the little piece anywhere. It ran with a beatific amouthness and Sir Frederick was so charming. Just a soupcon of temper perhaps; but after all, what then-one must have something.

Beigravia was indeed in raptures! Unaccustomed to see the eastly little god Love striding victoriously amongst its crowds, it at once opened its arms to him and gave him quite an ovation.

They blessed Bir Frederick and Lady Flora for the fresh sensation they had give it. It was absolutely unique all through a periest innovation. There had been sad cases of young people, who, wickedly desirous of marking out a path for themselves, had entered on it, crying aloud that silly old line, "All for love and the world well lost," as a sort of deflance, but they had been very justly thrust out of sight and speedily forgotten.

But here was a triumph, love and common sense hand in hand. An ideal marriage indeed! With nothing in it to provoke the wrath of guardians, or throw cold water on the warm congratulations of friends, or prevent the giving way to centimental remarks on the beauty of love unadulterated -love pure and simple-and untouched by mercenary motives. It was as though a touch of Arcadia had fallen into Vantty Fair, and brightened all things by its freshness.

The sun had shone gally on the marriage morning. What else could it do? cried the enthusiasts. The bride smiled through her tears, the bridegroom was the very personification of hope fulfilled. It was the pretties pageant possible. As the happy everybody told everybody else that for once in a way one might be sure that years of unbroken joy lay before them.

And everybody was wrong! Scarcely three months had elapsed when society was electrified by the news that Sir Frederic and Lady Blount had separated, "by mutual consent," Incompatibility of temper, said some; jealousy on both sides, said others, and neither was far wide of the

Sir Frederic, it must be confessed, had been somewhat wild in the earlier years of his life. He had sown several crops of the most unprofitable oats. His amusements had hardly been sans reproche, and some kind friends had hinted as much to the young bride.

Since his marriage, since his engagement indeed, he had run perfectly straight, but this the kind friends had forgotten to hint. She grew first horrified, then disgusted, then a little reckiess. She was so young that the very suspicion of the evil that the world holds looked in its tired bosom was unknown to her. She began with a determination not to care, to be revenged.

This resulted in his according her of a filr-tation with a man whom secretly she abhorred. It was an opening, and she selzed upon it, letting loose on him all the floodmiserable disappointment that had been consuming her.

Reoriminations grew furious. What had been called liveliness of disposition graw into decided temper, and before any hones friends could interfere, the devoted bride and bridegroom of three months ago had parted with the sworn determination on both sides never to see each other again.

The charming bome in Gloucestershire The Firs-was broken up. Bir Frederic went one way, Lady Flore another. When cross-examined by tearful relatives they both raged and stormed, and grew so vague and excitable that in the end no one could quite understand how such a terrible situation could have arisen out of what was seemingly a trivial affair.

"It is the most abourd case I ever heard of," says Mrs. Wylde to Lady Maria Walton with a shrug of her dainty shoulders. Both are friends of the Blounts, but Lady Maria is something more. She is a first cousin of Bir Frederic's on his mother's side, and a thirty-first cousin of Lady Flora's on her father's side. As men always carry the day, her sympathies are more or less for Sir Frederic, though she is an open admirer of Lady Fiora's, who, indeed, can be specially charming when she likes.

Lady Maria is a tail, able-bodied woman with no nonsense about her (unless we except her kindly heart), and a strongth of mind that renders her the terror of her sequaintances. With hera spade is indeed a spade, and she calls it so; but that she is a thoroughly honest-hearted and good patured woman au fond, nobody would dream of disputing.

"A neurd to a fault," says she now, a good deal of annoyance in her tone.

"What can they both be thinking off" A more wanton throwing away of happiness is unknown."

"Well, you see, she thinks one thing, he

"Of course we all knew they had tempers. But that they should come to such loggerheads, and all for nothing! She can't really believe that story."

"She says she does. She persists in believing. No harm talking about it," says Lady Maria rather savagely, "and all the world seems up in the ridiculous tale."

"Yes, such a bore!"

"We are quite aware that Frederic hader-you know-well, his thoughtless moments when a bachelor-and-er-"I know; they all do," says Mrs. Wylde with feeling, and a gentle flourish of her bands.

"Quite so," sympathetically. "Well, you know the story, don't you? Frederic had to go up to town very frequently after his marriage, strictly on business about that Alderly estate (though nothing can convince her of that now), and then he met Captain Stannard-you've met him-

Oh, yes! Horrid man!" "Weil, he induced him to run down with him to Richmond to one of those abominable littte dinners, you know." "I know," with increasing feeling.

"And there was an actress there. Most respectable young woman, I've learned since, though it's of no use to learn anything nowadays -- people believe just what they like. But at all events, Drewry was her name and Flora heard of it—the dinner (when he was supposed to be at his lawyer's), the name of the actress, everything."

"Why, through Mrs. Fane, of course. You know Violet; always troublesome, Felt it her duty, she said, to warn poor dear Flora of the way her husband was going on, and so destroyed the happiness of two nice young people. Really, I haven't patience with her.

"No bigger firt in town than Violet," says Mrs. Wylde with disgust. "Tried her hand-on Sir Frederic, I know for a fact, and finding herself thoroughly out of it, determined, I conclude, to be revenged on him. Paitry, I call it?" "Well, she has won her case," says Lady Maria with a sigh. "She told poor Flora not only that, but a good deal more. She poisoned her mind in many ways, mentioning things about Frederic's bachelor life that should not have been told to a young creature like Flora."

"She was always a dangerous person in splie of, or rather, because of her seraphie countenance. She looke like an angel and feels like s---"

"No, no, come now, my dear girl," interrupts Lady Maria bastily, who is very downright about earthly matters, but rather shrinks from tackling those of the other world. "No good in swearing. The end is before us. No use in quarrelling with fate. Flore out up very rough at first, drove Frederic away from her

"And is now apparently quite happy. saw her at the Despards' last week, and she was the life of the party."

"She is not happy for all that. She is only wearing herself out in a mad endeavor to appear so."

"I dare say; and all for nothing. For one thing, it is a pity that nobody can undeceive her about that actress. I'm sure Sir Prederic never went to Richmond to meet her or any other woman."

"He went simply because time hung heavily on his hands and he couldn't go nome because he had an appointment at his lawyer's for eleven o'clock the next morning. But Flora believes the worst. She goes about now celling him 'that men' ench bad taste! But she was too young a girl to be married to a young man, with her ideas of independence and her tem-

"Sir Frederic has a temper, too." "True, true; yet to me they seemed matched by heaven itself, and I am thoroughly downhearted about the whole at-What's that?" starting.

"A knock at the door. Fresh visitors," "rlors's knock, surely."

"Is it? Well I'm off," says Mrs. Wylde, rising. "She will have a dosen things to say to you, and I should be in the way. Good-bye."

A minute or two afterwards the door reopens to admit a very lovely vision. Suca a pretty young woman! A smail, siight, lovely creature, with big gray eyes and masses of nut-brown hair. Her nose is littie, a very little retrousse, and her mouth, if sweet when the owner of it is pleased, is distinctly suggestive of mutiny when the owner may be out of temper.

"On, Maria," cries she, precipitating berself into Lady Maria's arms, "what a bless ing to find you by yourself! I've such a lot of things to say to you."

"Have you, dear? Then sit down here, near me. About," with prophetic instinct that is hardly of the first order, "Sir Erederio?"

"About him! Not likely!" with great show of indignation.

"About what, then?" says Lady Maria with seeming curiosity. Lady Mariaknows her. It is surely Sir Frederic or nothing that has brought her. "Take off your fure, and pull your chair up to the fire. Now then for your news."

"Oh, well, I must warm myself first," emporising. "There is so much, you see to tell, that I By the bye, as you men tioned that man, you may as well tell me if you have seen him lately."

"Quite lately. Yesterday in fact." "Ab." Rioquent stience. "How is he looking?"

"Pretty well. Pale perhaps, if anything. A little dejected; I can't suppose he is happy."

"Can't you?" scornfully, "I can, He has obtained his beloved liberty again; that counts with a man."

"With some men perhaps. You are look ing pale too, dear," ignoring her outburst, "A little rest would be good for you. Why not come down to the country with me for Christmas? So quiet. Not a soul! I shan't sak any one to the Beechee this year."

"] should like it, but-you are so close to my-his house-that-I should hate to go," "You needn't be afraid of meeting him there. He is going abroad almost directly."

"Eh?" starting violently.

"Yes, abroad."

"But where?"

"Italy." "Italy! Why Italy? What on earth is taking him to Italy?" She rises sbruptly and walks over to the window as though repose is impossible to her. "Who is going with him?" asks she at last in quite a dreadful tone. "I haven't saked him," returns Lady Maria coldly.

"You showed your sense. It is that woman, of course!" "What woman?" idiy.

"Oh, you know! That actress, Drewry!" "Really, Flors," says Lady Maria with very righteous anger, "I must request you will not talk to me like this,"

"Why not? You aren't dead to the world, I suppose. You sren't deaf, dumb, or blind. You are a reasonable person; you must see for yourself how things go."

"I may not be blind; but you are, and most wiifully so. That woman, as you call her, is a most respectable person, and is about to be married to a solicitor in very good practice. I have made minute inquiries, and I firmly believe that Frederic knows as much about her as he does of the solar system, and you know how ignorant

he is about theif Professor-"Not a bit more ignorant than any one

"That's what you think, my dear. Nonenes, Flora; I have questioned him about Miss Drewry, and he doesn't so much admire her. He told me she had high shoulders, and a mouth from ear to ear,"

"And you were taken in by that! Why that's the oldest trick of all. When men tell in love where they ought not, they always describe the woman to their friends se 'not much to look at, you know,' something like that. Really, Maria, with your experience you ought to know some thing.

This aliusion to her age very naturally incenses Lady Maria.

"And you, with your experience, of course, know everything," says she with withering contempt. "My good child, if I were you, !---"

"What's that?" says Lady Flore suddenly, half rising from her chair and glanding ly, half rising from her count of a nervously at the door. The sound of a loud anock at the hall door is clanging through the bouse, "Maria! His knock! "Weit, what of it? Why not stay and see him, Flora? I am sure if you both met "Met! Do you think I should stay for one moment in the room with that man? No! I shall go in here," moving towards a door at the end of the room that leads to amailer apartment beyond, "until be still a good deal to say to you." She has hardly had time to gain her city of refuge when the servant ushers into the drawing-room Sir Frederic Blount chooses to bring his visit to an end. I have "Thought I heard voices," says be suspictously, when he has greeted Lady

"Well, so you did," says she a little impatiently, not being in the best of tempers.

"Ab! Lady Blount?" "H'm. In there now?" pointing to opposite door.

"I dareny." A pause. "How is she looking?" demands Sir Frederic, after a perceptible struggle with nie dignity, "Very lovely indeed; but pale, I think, Way on earth, Frederic, don't you try to make it up with her?"

"With her! You must be mad, Maria! What! when she wilfully sought a quarrel with me, and openly insulted me! Look here, I loved her as my own soul, and she deliterately separated herself from me."

"Yet I think she is very unbappy." "A woman without a heart is never unрарру."

"Roally, Frederic, I do think you are uniust. She-

"I'm done with her. Don't let us dis-cuss her any further. She can go her way, i can go mine for the future."

"I don't see where she is to go at all vents. A women in her equivocal position is always in the wrong." "It is her own doing. She evidently found life dull with me, and very cleverly sought and found a road out of her diffioulty."

. S.ill you must care about her welfare."

"I don't," doggedly.
"I give you credit for better feeling then that; so I will tell you that she is consing down with me to Giousestershire for Christmas. She will be therefore within a unlie or two of her-your-home.' "A hint to me to keep away," with a hitter laugh. "Don't be frightened! I am going abroad, as you know."

"I am sorry about that. I had hoped

"Hope nothing where we two are concorned; ail is over and done with." He pauses, looks out of the window and then comes back to Lady Maria, "She-she has plenty of money, at all e.ents," says he with a frown that is meant to prevent anybody from thinking that his question contains any gentie concern for her.

"Plenty, I should say."

"You blame me, Maria," says the young man suddenly. "You think I should give in and explain, and condone the fact that she has maligned me most cruelly; but that is not all. She flirted most diagracefully with a hideous little brute of a husear last time we were at a bail together, and "I know all about that. She says it was only because she was so risgusted with your behavior," says Lady Maria. "You are a pair of babies; you ought to be taken in hand by some firm person, and compelled to behave yourselves."

"Oh! she mays that, does she?" wrathfully: "Well, I don't care what she says. Anyhow, I shan't keep her in durance vite any longer," taking up his bat. "Some other day I may be fortunate enough to PHILADELPHIA, PRESUARY 8, 1800.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Club...... 10.00
Additions to Clubs can be made at any time during the year at same rate.

It is not required that all the members of a Club hast the same rootoffee.

Remit by Postal Order, Postal Note, Draft, Check,

Always enclose postage for correspondence requiring separate reply, to insure response. ADVERTISING RATES FURNISHED ON APPLICA-

Address all letters to

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST.

Philadelphia, Pa.

Publication office, 736 Sansom St.

A PREMIUM TO SUBSCRIBERS

THE POST will send as a premium to every person who sends us $2.00 for one year's subscription in advance, either the magnificent picture of "CHRIST BEFORE PILATE." which we have described in for. mer issues, or the two splendid companion photo gravures "IN LOVE" and "THE PEAGENARRE" They are printed on heavy tour d paper, and are in miss 12 x 16 theneseach. The subject of the first named dressed in the fashion of our grandfathers and grandmothers, sitting under a tree in the garden of an old-time mansion. The maiden is sewing and the lover after the style of the period, is paying her most courteous attention. Everything in the work is full of life and beauty. In the cond picture, "The Peacemaker," the couple have plainly had a querrel. Both presend to want to part, and at the same time both are evidently glad of the kind offices of a young lady friend who has just come upon the scene, and wishes to have them "make it up." Each picture tells its own story completely, and each is the sequei and complement of the other. Prettier works of art or peater pictures for the ornamentation of a parlor or sittingroom, never came from the hands of an ar-

Remember we send either "Christ Before Pilate," or the Two Spiendid Companion Photo-gravures "In Love" and "The Peacemaker," all postage paid to each subscriber who sends us $2 00 for THE POST one year.

Sowing and Reaping.

We sow as we choose our seed, and we reap as we sow. We cannot change the substance of our husbandry, and as the seedtime so the harvest.

Good grain and careful tillage ensure us wealth, abundance and stability in the years to come; but our tares yield us no stretches of wheat ripening into gold by the sun, our thistics give us no figs.

From our lavish plantation of poisonous thorns we gather no grapes for the wine which makes glad the heart of man; of our wild-oats flung broadcast we grind no meal for our children's bread.

We resp as we sow; and no power on earth can touch the appointed issue. If we resp as we sow, we garner as we reap.

It all depends on ourselves whether we fill our barns with enduring riches or pile them up with perishing and corrupting matter—whether we choose for our possession truth or falsehood.

Some of us prefer the falsehoods of life. They are prettier and more seductive than the truths; but the pity of it is these falsehoods are like the leaves which Rubezahl made to look like solid gold—like the pleasant bowers and platters of dainty food by which the Algonquin rabbit beguiled the wessel.

Those heaps of golden coin were but glittering cheats to the weak-kneed peasant who had sold his honest manhood for their gain; those bowers of rest and pleasantness were but mounds of dust set round with briars and burr to the beguiled weasel; and both man and beast woke to hurs and shame and sorrow when the morning broke and the trick of the false metal and the disguised disgrace was discovered.

So with our own lives. We choose such and such a path—such and such a manner of being, and as time passes and the seed ripens into the fruit, we find by unalterable experience what is to be our enduring possession.

The riot and dissipation of youth, for example, has a harvesting for old age not of the most sufficing character.

Time lost, and with time, health and money and more or less of repute, leave gaps in the soul's palace through which the keen winds whistle and rave.

From pride and a haughty temper, as suming to itself the kingship of men, comes isolation but not supremacy. This is the garnering got from that self-sown plant of personal glorification.

He to whom sympathy with others is an unworthy condescension, who demands homage rather than love, and whose pride brooks neither contradiction nor remon strance, is one who must be content to live without true affection and to die without real regret; but he is not necessarily compensated by the reality of the superiority he has so strenuously believed in. Perhaps at the end of all he learns his mistake.

Cognate with this is generalized illnature—of instructions which are essen tially slanderous, of ridicule which is talse presentation, of sneers which are ingratitude, of comments which are treachery.

This, too, is the kind of thing that obtains in the world, and whereof the proficients are accounted good company and amusing dinner guests.

Reputations which hitherto had been un sultied, now smeared and soiled by the sooty fingers of this husbandman of illnature, lie on his track, as defaced statues and broken columns mark the track of a hostile force.

innocent actions turned the other way round, and the light distorted so that the angles shall show and the hills and hol lows be reversed; personal characteristics dealt with in the same way, and a fund of evil shown to exist where is nothing but a harmless idiosyneracy: a character pulled to pieces, and not a merit left belonging to it: friends laughed at when they are not traduced, and the whole living drama tossed up like so much toam from bitter waters; confidences half revealed, and the rest left to the exaggeration of the imagination-this is a little corner of that cruel field which the congenitally ill-natured plough, sow and harrow.

And the harvest? Well, the harvest is one of universal suspicion, of unconcealed distrust, of quiet shrinking from dangerous association.

The timid fear him; the loyal condemn him; the frank dislike his doubleness of face; the kindly feel his satire as it were the sting of a scorpion—the fang of a serpent.

Even those who lough with him when he laughs at others, fight shy of him for their own intimacy, and his 'cleverness' simply fills his barns with arid dust where is neitheir food nor beauty.

He reaps as he sows. He sows ill nature and he reaps repulsion. He sows sarcasm and insinuated alander, and he reaps fear and condemnation.

He sows ingratitude, duplicity, treachery, and he reaps the honest scorn of those who do not wear two faces under one hood, and whose lives are single as their words are true.

The Indian expression of the 'split tongue, is the rightful description of these behind-back slanderers, ridiculers, satirists.

Yes; we reap as we sow. If we sow faith and truth, loyalty and uprightness, sincerity and sympathy, we shall reap of the like, and our barns will overflow with the love and esteem of our fellows, bound to us by the golden chain of trust and esteem.

It we sow the reverse we shall reap ac cordingly, and old age will find us dishonored and disesteemed, the noted enemy of many and the cherished friend of none.

Some people are often called "mean" by those with whom they trade, because they inquire beforehand what will be the charge for a place of work undertaken. To our way of thinking this is a perfectly legitimate and proper inquiry, even when made by persons with full purses. Why should they, or any one else, offer a premium for extortion by pursuing the opposite course; or open the door for endless petty disputes on points differently understood by the same parties? It has a very suspicious look when a person is unwilling to come to plain terms in a business matter.

THE instant the head is laid on the pillow is that in which conscience delivers its decrees. If it has conceived any evil design, it is surrounded with thorns. The soltest down is hard under the restless head of the wicked. In order to be happy, one must be on good terms with one's pillow, for the nightly reproaches it can make must be heard; yet it is never so delicious, so tran quil, as after a day on which one has performed some good act, or when one is conscious of having spent it in some useful or substantial employment.

No man is a gentleman who, without provocation, would treat with incivility the numblest of his species. It is a vulgarity for which no accomplishments of dress or address can ever atone. Show us the man who desires to make every one happy around him, and whose greatest solicitude is never to give just cause of offence 'o any one, and we will show you a gentleman by nature and by practice, though he may never have worn a suit of broadcloth, nor even heard of a lexicon.

Ir you would be free from sin, fly temp tation; he that does not endeavor to avoid the one, cannot expect Providence to de fend him from the other. If the first sparks of ill were quenched, there would be no flame; for how can he kill who dares not be angry, or be an adulterer in act, that does not transgress in desire? How can he be perjured who fears an oath; or he defraud that does not allow himself to covet?

It is a common and favorite notion with many people that the morning air is the purest, most bracing; but the very opposite is the fact. The air is more full of dampness, fog, missm, at about sunrise, which the sun, however, soon dissipates. Before engaging in anything like exercise or work in the early morning out of doors, it is conducive to health to take a warm cup of coffee, if breakfast is not to be had.

Every duty, even the least, involves the whole principle of obedience; and little duties make the will dutiful, that it is sup ple and prompt to obey. Little obediences lead into great. The daily round of duty is full of probation and discipline; it trains the will, heart and conscience. The commonest life may be full of perfection. The duties of home are a discipline for the min istries of Heaven.

REFOREIBILITY is all the greater because we are left to assess ourselves. The blank form is sent to us, and left to our honor to fill up. Do not tamper with the paper, for remember there is a recruiting officer who will examine your schedule, who knows all about your possession. Do as you, who have received everything from the Lord, are bound to do.

PETER the Great, when at Zuardam, wish ed to hear a rather famous preacher. The latter consented to preach before the Czar. Having ascended the pulpit, he said, with solemnity and dignity, "Think well, speak well, and act well. Amen."

TRUTHPULNESS is a corner stone in char acter; and if it be not firmly laid in youth, there will ever after be a weak spot in the foundation.

Men want a restraining as well as propelling power. The good ship is provided with anchors as well as sails.

To embrace the whole universe with love sounds beautiful; but we must begin with the individual, the nearest.

Avowed work, even when uncongenial is far less trying to patience than feigned pleasure.

To most persons it is less dangerous to do them hurt than to do them too much good.

SIM and misery are not lovers, but they walk band in hand just as if they were.

The World's Happenings

A Pennsylvania baby has been born and named "La Grippe." Infant burglars to the number of a dozen are now awaiting trial in New York,

According to the "American Art Printer"

there are 125,000 printers in the United States.

A lad of 18 in Bay Shore, L. L. has become violently insane through the excessive use of organities.

Of all the ailens who took out letters of naturalization in England fast year only three were Americans.

Chief Justice Puller's old tin sign is still tacked to the stalrease leading to his old office in

After New York dinners now the guests sing or speak-lute the phonograph and hear their own voices returned from it.

A lad named Simons is the pride of Santa Gruz county, California. He is 17 years old, stands 6 feet 3% inches high, and weighs 200 pounds.

A colored man named Redick, of Bridgewater, this State, claims to be 112 years old. He eajoys good health and does chores for a living.

Mrs E. E. Page, of St. Louis, gave birth last Friday to four well-developed female bables, all of whom are alive and give mir promise of surviving.

Prince T. K y Kubah Mirsa, who is a

Sist cousin of the Shah of Pervia, has been sent to Siberia by the Russian Government for distributing base money. Near Virginia City, Nev., the other night an applicate vesting celt foundered into a night an unlucky yearling colt floundered into a snow drift and strock fast. Then some lucky coyotes came along and had suppor.

A London paper tells of a dog which, having run away from its new master, traveled to miles over an unknown country to its old home,

A post mortem examination revealed in the stomach of a valuable bull terrier that died suddenly in Revere, Mass, several gards of string, burned matches and a cigarette holder.

Chicago physicians recently laid bare the spinal column of a boy and removed a clot of blood and now believe that he will recover from the effects of a stroke of paralysis, which he suffered Christmas Day.

In Mexico people distrust a young physician until he has had a couple of years practice.

Then they make an inventory of his patients, and if he has cured more than he has killed they recognize

A Cincinnati man who has pleasered a record of 200 ratiroad accidents happening in this country in the past year, finds that only thirteen out of the lot occurred from causes beyond human control.

Think of four pears weighing twenty pounds and three onions twenty-one pounds; a potato fourteen inches long, and peaches twelve to fitteen inches in circumference. These are products of Los Angelos, Cal.

While Mr and Mrs. Jacob R semberg ware celebrating their sliver wedding in Chicago the other night. Mrs. Resemberg, who had seemed in the best of health and spirits, fell suddenly into the arms of her husband, and died almost immediately.

Verdict of a coroner's jury in Delaware

Verdict of a coroner's Jdry in Delaware county, N. Y.; "The Jury finds that diseased came to his Death through the indisease of Liquor and carelesaness on his part and while liting on West bounded trank, and killed by train No. 1 exonerating the Company from blame."

A big New joundland in Allegheny City, by hispersistent barking, a night or two ago, aroused his master, who, looking out of a window, discovered a large building close by in finness. The occupants of the burning structure were notified, and had barely time to make their escape.

The oldest lawsuit on record is now being tried in the highest Bussian Court at St. Palessburg. It was brought 500 years ago against the city of Kamenez-Podolsk by the heirs of a dead nobleman to recover many thousand acres of his estate which had been configurated by the municipality.

A child born in West Manchester, N H, lately, looked more like a frog than a human being. "It had no neck, and the eyes of which there were six were so located as to look skyward. The arms and hands were formed precisely like those of a frog. It had a double spine, and died soon after birth."

Henry James Lambert, of Plattamou h, Neb., is the name of the young Englishman who has written to Atlanta for the purpose of scouring a full-blooded negrees for a bride. It is purpose is to solve the race problem, and he thinks miseegenation will do it by absorbing and extinguishing the colored race.

A Nor hfield (O.) farmer named Abner Greenleaf, having a premonition that the summer weather would extend far into the winter, tried a little experiment. He planted a number of hile of potatoes late in September. The tabers throve well, and on Christmas day the farmer's table was supplied with new petatoes from his own garden.

A few nights ago Farmer Jones, of Porterville, Cal., lost a fine sheep by coyotes. He thereupon turned into the field a drove of wild hogs, and left the careass, in hopes the coyotes would pay a second visit. Sure enough, the next night three came for another feast, but the hogs took a hand, cornered the varmints and killed them.

A new story of the familiar Georgia type is to the effect that a resident of Elberton owns a pet goose that patrols his grounds all night, and, when a stranger approaches, sets up a moise that arouses all the sleepers for quite a distance around. It is added that this remarkable biped has been known to attack intruders and tear their clothing.

A Maine parson on the watch for chances to do good, went into a lumber camp near Washburn (Me.) on a recent Sunday and proposed to preach sermon. The suggestion was enthusiastically received by the crew, who, after listening attentively to what the clergman had to say, showed their appreciation of his thoughtfulness by presenting him with $23.50, the amount of a collection.

Shall I wish for you, sweet friend, That the rose of brauty fair, Now mantling on your cheek, Shall bloom forever there?

Be yours a tife of virtue rare, All free from pain and won, Attended by the purest joys The human heart can know.

And when life's pligrimage is o'er, All earthly ties are rives, I then would earnest ask for you A brighter home in Heaven.

There, there agaid the pearly street And shining course above, Fore'er attune your guiden lyre In songs of joy and love.

Two to a Quarrel.

BY PHYLLIS.

T had been an ideal marriage! Everybody had been delighted with it; and occurring as it did just at the close of last season, had been considered a very fitting wind up to it. Both the principal actors in the fashionable drama had hosse of friends, and the general rejoidings over the happy event had been, therefore, not only loud, but deep.

Lady Flora Travers was an orphan, young, lovely, lively—a little too lively perhaps—and an heiress into the bargain, on quite a grand scale. Sir Frederick Blount was an orphan too, young, handsome and quite abominately rich for a man whose heart had gone out to an heiress; and there hadn't been the slightest doubt about the amount of heart thrown into the affair; two people so utterly and entirely in love had seldom (every one agreed) been seen.

It was the most deliciously romantic thing all through. Society was charmed. There wasn't a flaw in the little piece anywhere. It ran with a beatific smoothness; and Sir Frederick was so charming. Just a soupcon of temper perhaps: but after all, what then—one must have something.

what then—one must have something.

Beigravia was indeed in raptures! Unaccustomed to see the sandy little god Love striding victoriously amongst its crowds, it at once opened its arms to him and gave him quite an ovation.

They bleased Bir Frederick and Lady Flora for the fresh sensation they had gives it. It was absolutely unique all through, a periect innovation. There had been sad cases of young people, who, wickedly desirous of marking out a path for themselves, had entered on it, crying aloud that alliy old line, "All for love and the world well lost," as a sort of defiance, but they had been very justly thrust out of sight and speedily forgotten.

But here was a triumph, love and common sense hand in hand. An ideal marriage indeed! With nothing in it to provoke the wrath of guardians, or throw cold water on the warm congratulations of friends, or prevent the giving way to centimental remarks on the beauty of love unadulterated—love pure and simple—and untouched by mercenary motives. It was as though a touch of Arcadia had failen into Vanity Fair, and brightened all things by its freenness.

The sun had shone gaily on the marriage morning. What else could it do? cried the enthusiasts. The bride smiled through her tears, the bridegroom was the very personification of hope fulfilled. It was the pretties pageant possible. As the happy pair drove away beneath a shower of rice, everybody told everybody else that for once in a way one might be sure that years of unbroken joy lay before them.

And everybody was wrong!
Scarcely three months had elapsed when society was electrified by the news that Sir Frederic and Lady Blount had separated, "by mutual consent." Incompatibility of temper, said some; jealousy on both sides, said others, and neither was far wide of the mark.

Sir Frederic, it must be confessed, had been somewhat wild in the earlier years of his life. He had sown several crops of the most unprofitable cats. His amusements had hardly been sans reproche, and some kind friends had hinted as much to the young bride.

Since his marriage, since his engagement indeed, he had run perfectly straight, but this the kind friends had forgotten to hint. She grew first horrified, then disgusted, then a little reckiess. She was so young that the very suspicion of the evil that the world holds looked in its tired bosom was unknown to her. She began with a determination not to care, to be revenged.

This resulted in his accuming her of a filr-tation with a man whom secretly she abhorred. It was an opening, and she selred upon it, letting loose on him all the floodgates of wrath and wounded pride and miserable disappointment that had been consuming her.

Recriminations grew furious. What had been called liveliness of disposition grew into decided temper, and before any honest friends could interfere, the devoted bride and bridegroom of three months ago had parted with the sworn determination on both sides never to see each other again.

The charming home in Gloucestershire—The Firs—was broken up. Sir Frederic went one way, Ledy Flora another. When cross-examined by tearful relatives they both raged and stormed, and grew so vague and excitable that in the end no one could and excitable that in the end no one could quite understand how such a terrible situation could have arisen out of what was seemingly a trivial affair.

"It is the most abourd case I ever heard of," says Mrs. Wylde to Lady Maris Welton with a shrug of her dainty shoulders. Both are friends of the Biounts, but Lady Maria is something more. She is a first cousin of Sir Frederic's on his mother's side, and a thirty-first cousin of Lady Flora's on her father's side. As men always carry the day, her sympathies are more or less for Sir Frederic, though she is an open admirer of Lady Flora's, who, indeed, can be specially charming when she likes.

Lady Maris is a tail, able-bodied woman with no nonsense about her (unless we except her kindly heart), and a strength of mind that renders her the terror of her sequalntanees. With here spade is indeed a spade, and she calls it so; but that she is a thoroughly honest-hearted and good natured woman au fond, nobody would dream of disputing.

"A baurd to a fault," says she now, a good deal of annoyance in her tone.

"What can they both be thinking off"
A more wanton throwing away of happi-

"Well, you ace, she thinks one thing, he another."

"Of course we all knew they had tempers. But that they should come to such loggerheads, and all for nothing! She can't really believe that story."

"She says she does. She persists in believing. No harm taiking about it," says Lady Maria rather savagely, "and all the world seems up in the ridiculous tale."

"Yes, such a bore!"
"We are quite aware that Frederic had—or—you know—well, his thoughtiess moments when a bachelor—and—er—''

"I know; they all do," says Mrs. Wylde with feeling, and a gentle flourish of her hands.

"Quite so," sympathetically. "Well, you know the story, don't you? Frederic had to go up to town very frequently after his marriage, strictly on pusiness about that Allerly estate (though nothing can convince her of that now), and then he met Captain Stannard—you've met him——"

"Oh, yes! Horrid man!"
"Well, he induced him to run down with him to Richmond to one of those abominable little dinners, you know."

"I know," with increasing feeling.

"And there was an actress there. Most respectable young woman, I've learned since, though it's of no use to learn anything nowadays—people believe just what they like. But at all events, Drewry was her name and Flora heard of it—the dinner (when he was supposed to be at his lawyer's), the name of the actress, everything."

"But how?"

"Why, through Mrs. Fane, of course. You know Violet; always troublesome. Feit it her duty, she said, to warn poor dear Flora of the way her husband was going on, and so destroyed the happiness of two nice young people. Realiy, I haven't patience with her."

"No bigger firt in town than Violet," says Mrs. Wylde with disgust. "Tried her hand on Sir Frederic, I know for a fact, and finding herself thoroughly out of it, determined, I conclude, to be revenged on him. Paitry, I call it!"

"Well, she has won her case," says Lady Maria with a sigh. "She told poor Flora not only that, but a good deal more. She poisoned her mind in many ways, mentioning things about Frederic's bachelor life that should not have been told to a young creature like Flora."

"She was always a dangerous person in spite of, or rather, because of her seraphic countenance. She looks like an angel and feels like a..."

"No, no, come now, my dear girl," interrupts Lady Maria hastily, who is very downright about earthly matters, but rather shrinks from tackling those of the other world. "No good in swearing. The end is before us. No use in quarrelling with fate. Flore out up very rough at first, drove Prederic away from her—"

"And is now apparently quite happy. I saw her at the Despards' last week, and she was the life of the party."

"She is not happy for all that. She is only wearing herself out in a mad endeavor to appear so."

"I dare say; and all for nothing. For one thing, it is a pity that nobody can undeceive her about that socress. I'm sure Sir Fraderic never went to Richmond to meet her or any other woman."

"He went simply because time hung heavily on his hands and he couldn't go home because he had an appointment at his lawyer's for eleven o'clock the next morning. But Flora believes the worst. She goes about now calling him 'that man'—such bad taste! But she was too young a girl to be married to a young man, with her ideas of independence and her temper."

"Sir Frederic has a temper, too."

"True, true; yet to me they seemed matched by heaven itself, and I am thoroughly downhearied about the whole affair. What's that?" starting.

"A knock at the door. Fresh visitors,"
"triors's knock, surely."

"Is it? Well I'm off," says Mrs. Wylds, rising. "She will have a dosen things to say to you, and I should be in the way.

A minute or two afterwards the door reopens to admit a very lovely vision. Such a pretty young woman! A small, slight, lovely creature, with big gray eyes and masses of nut-brown hair. Her nose is liftic, a very little retrouses, and her mouth, if sweet when the owner of it is pleased, is distinctly suggestive of mutiny when the owner may be out of temper.

"On, Maria," cries she, precipitating herself into Lady Maria's arms, "what a blessing to find you by yourself! I've such a lot of things to say to you."

"Have you, dear? Then sit down here, near me. About," with prophetic instinct that is hardly of the first order, "Sir Frederic?"

"About him! Not likely!" with great show of indignation.

"About what, then?" says Lady Maria with seeming ouriosity. Lady Maria knows her. It is surely Sir Frederic or nothing that has brought her. "Take off your furs, and pull your chair up to the fire. Now then for your news."

"Oh, well, I must warm myself first," temporising. "There is so much, you see, to tell, that I—— By the bye, as you mentioned that man, you may as well tell me if you have seen him lately."

"Quite lately. Yesterday in fact."
"Ah." Eloquent stlence. "How is he looking?"

"Pretty well. Pale perhaps, if anything.
A little dejected; I can't suppose he is happy."

"Oan't you?" seornfully. "I can. He has obtained his beloved liberty sgain; that counts with a man."

"With some men perhaps. You are looking pale too, dear," ignoring her outburst, "A little rest would be good for you. Why not come down to the country with me for Christmas? So quiet. Not a soul! I shan't ask any one to the Beechee this year."

"I should like it, but—you are so close to my—his house—that—I should hate to go," "You needn't be afraid of meeting him there. He is going abroad almost di-

"Eh?" starting violently.

"Yes, abroad."

"But where?"

"Italy! Why Italy? What on earth is taking him to Italy?" She rises sbruptly and walks over to the window as though repose is impossible to her. "Who is going with him?" asks she at last in quite a dreadful tone.

"I haven't asked him," returns Lady Maria coldly.

"You showed your sense. It is that woman, of course!"

"What woman?" icily.
"On, you know! That actress, Drewry!"
"Really, Flora," says Lady Maria with very righteous anger, "I must request you

"Why not? You aren't dead to the world, I suppose. You aren't deaf, dumb, or blind. You are a reasonable person; you must see for yourself how things go."

will not talk to me like this,"

"I may not be blind; but you are, and most wilfully so. That woman, as you call her, is a most respectable person, and is about to be married to a solicitor in very good practice. I have made minute inquiries, and I firmly believe that Frederic knows as much about her as he does of the solar system, and you know how ignorant he is about theif Professor—"

"Not a bit more ignorant than any one else," interrupts Lady Flora tartly.

"That's what you think, my dear. Ronsense, Flora: I have questioned him about Miss Drowry, and he doesn't so much as admire her. He told me she had high shoulders, and a mouth from ear to ear."

"And you were taken in by that! Why that's the oldest trick of all. When men fell in love where they ought not, they always describe the woman to their friends as not much to look at, you know,' or something like that. Really, Maria, with your experience you ought to know something."

This aliusion to her age very naturally incenses Lady Maria.

"And you, with your experience, of course, know everything," says she with withering contempt, "My good child, if I were you, I——"

"What's thei?" says Lady Flora suddenly, half rising from her chair and glanding nervously at the door. The sound of a loud anosk at the hell door is clanging through the house. "Mariai His knock!"

"Weit, what of it? Why not stay and see him, Flora? I am sure it you both met you—"

"Met! Do you think I should stay for one mousest in the room with that man?
No! I shall go in here," moving towards a door at the end of the room that leads to a smaller apartment beyond, "until he chooses to bring his visit to an end. I have still a good deal to say to you."

She has hardly had time to gain her city of refuge when the servant ushers into the drawing-room Sir Frederic Blount.

"Thought I heard voices," says be suspictously, when he has greeted Lady Maria.

"Well, so you did," says she a little impatiently, not being in the best of tempers.
"Ah! Lady Biount?"

"H'm. In there now?" pointing to opposite door.

"I daressy." A pause.

"How is she looking?" demands Sir Frederic, after a perceptible struggle with his dignity,

"Very lovely indeed; but pale, I think, Way on earth, Frederic, don't you try to make it up with her?"

"With her! You must be mad, Maris! What! when she wittuly sought a quarre! with me, and openly insulted me! Look here, I loved her as my own soul, and she deliterately separated herself from me,"

"Yet I think she is very unbappy."

"A woman without a beart is never unhappy."

"Roally, Frederic, I do think you are unjust. She—"

"I'm done with her. Don't let us discuss her any further. She can go her way.

ican go mine for the future."

"I don't see where she is to go at all events. A women in her equivocal position is always in the wrong."

"It is her own doing. She evidently found life dull with me, and very cleverly sought and found a road out of her difficulty."

. S.ill you must care about her welfare."

"I don't," doggadly.
"I give you credit for better feeling than that; so I will tell you that she is coming down with me to Gioucestershire for Christmas. She will be therefore within a mile or two of her—your—home."

"A hint to me to keep away," with a bitter laugh. "Don't be frightened! I am going abroad, as you know."

"I am sorry about that, I had hoped

"Hope nothing where we two are concerned; ail is over and done with." He pauses, looks out of the window and then comes back to Lady Maria. "She—she has plenty of money, at all e.ents," says he with a frown that is meant to prevent anybody from thinking that his question contains any gentic concern for her.

"Plenty, I should say."

"You blame me, Maria," says the young man suddenly. "You think I should give in and explain, and condone the fact that she has maligned me most cruelly; but that is not all. She flirted most diagracefully with a hideous little brute of a hussar last time we were at a ball together, and "I know all about that. She says it was only because she was so 'isgusted with your behavior," says Lady Maria. "You are a pair of babies; you ought to be taken in hand by some firm person, and compelled to behave yourselves."

"Oh! she says that, does she?" wrathfully: "Well, I don't care what she says. Anyhow, I shan't keep her in durance vile any longer," taking up his hat. "Some other day I may be fortunate enough to find you at home without her."

Ledy Maria, rather relieved, bide him a kindly added and goes instantly to the room that has harbored the fugitive. But where is she? And what is this awfaily cold esting air that solutes her as she enters the apartment? What do the servants mean by opening the windows at this time of the year—and—Good heavens! are those Flora's least?

It is all that can be seen of Flora et pres-eat, at all events. She has thrown up the sach of the window to its highest extent, and tes thrown her body out of window with an amount of generosity that threat-ess to develop itself into unconscious sui-

Lady Maria catching sight of her and her remarkable attitude, gives way to wild but secret mirth. All this to catch one fleeting glance at the back of his head?

"Floral Floral" crise she. "What on arth are you doing there?"

Her voice is shrill, and Flora, hearing it, crambles back to her feet with crimson bests and a manner openly confused.

"My dear, if you had run down stairs to be library you could have seen him quite.

the library you could have seen him quite easily and without all this danger," says Lady Maria rather maliciously. "The slightest tip would have sent you into the area. How loolish! If I had known you

"He didn't spare you certainly; but he was just, I think."
"Thank you," angrily. "He was not only just, as you call it, but evidently in the nighest spirits. I could hear his voice here bateful voice, Well—er—and how is he looking now?"

Lady Maria gives way to sardonic mirth.
"Well?" says Lady Flore, regarding her with distinct distance. "What have I said make you laugh?"

"Not much. Only—that is just the fire question he asked me about you."

"How rude of him!" flushing angrily.
"And you? I hope you said I was never looking better." I said you were in robust health and didn't care a bit about anything con-nected with him, at all events."

"Oh, did you?" with a perceptible fall of the lovely face and an accent replete with disappointment.

"That was right, wasn't it?" says Lady

Maria blandly.

"Quite right. Fancy his wanting to know how I looked! For why, I wonder?"

"Mere idle curiosity, my dear, of course—the same feeling that made you nearly throw yourself out of the window just now simply to catch a fleeting vision of the back of his detected head."

"If you think it was anything else!"

"I don't my dear giri, how could I?"

"And is it true he is going abroad?"

"Quite true. He starts next week, I fancy, so you are safe if you come to Gloucester with me for Ohristmas. In fact, I made it safe for you. I told him you were to be with me at that time."

"Said that alone would be sufficient to keep him out of the county."

"He said that?" She has risen to her feet and is looking very pale. She recovers herself, however, almost immediately. "I'm glad he has some sense of decency," mys she haughtily.

It is some weeks later and Christmas Day. Quite a correct Christmas Day, with snowflakes flying and overgreens so white as to belie their name, and icicles drooping from the bridge that spans the river that flows through Lady Maria's pretty downship.

Both she and Lady Flore had been should see and lady riors and been so church-in the morning, and had enjoyed a good lunch starwards, and are now dosing with a pretence at reading before a fire that might have ressted an extinct in the good old days when reasted exen were.

Lady Maria has, indeed, so far given into the blandishments of Somme that a gentle snore wakens the air around ner, more up-Fiers roused by it, starts into a more up-right position and a sudden knowledge that a maniy footstep is rapidly approach-ing the small and cony room in which they sitting.

"Good heavens, Marial Wakel wakel someone is coming. Oh! you told me he had gone to Italy and now——"
"Wel!, so he has," mays Lady Maria, rubhing her eyes.

"He hann's. He is here. He is coming up the stairs. Oh!" springing to her feet and looking distractedly around her, "where shall I go?"

"He is coming, cure enough," says Ledy Maria, now wide awake. "Blees me, what liars men are. And he declared to me that "Never mind anything. Think of me," eries Lady Flora, literally wringing her hands in front of her hostess, "I can't go out the door or I'll meet him face to face.

"But my dear," gasps poor Ledy Maria wildly, "he will probably say all sorts of things and you will be listening, and—; good gracious, it isn't fair. It will be dreadful."

"I shall put my fingers in my ears. Betray me at your pertil" eries Lady Flora in a dramatic whisper. The tail of her gown just disappears behind the tail Japanese screen as Sir Frederic Blount is an nounced.

And now begins a purgatory for poo ady Maria

Ledy Maria.

"Thought—er—that as I, had to drop down to this part of the world I'd like to come and see you," says Sir Frederic with manifest bypoerisy and a series of furtive giances all around the room as though in search of so nething. "Thought, too, that I—er—heard voices as I came up the state."

"And I thought you were safe in Italy," says Lady Maria, who is very justy exasperated by his appearance at this mo-

"Had to put it off for a week or so. Bus-ness down here with my steward. Beastly nuisance, but had to come."

Awkward stience. Ledy Maria, with her eyes fixed on the Japanese screen, is giving herself up a prey to despair. As for her putting her fingers in her ears, she doesn't believe a word of it.

"Lady Flore with you?" sake Sir Fred-eric at last, jerking out the question awk-

"Yes,"
"Gone out for a walk?"
"No, no. In retirement," says the wretched Lady Maria with a groan that she adroitly turus into a sneems.
"Ab, headache?"
"Really, Frederic, considering the terms you and Lady Fiora are on I think its life, and the state of you. to may the tie-well-a little odd of you, to say the least of it, to eross-examine me about her like this; such an xiety about her health on "Anxiety? on my part? I cau't imagine what you mean by that," exclaims Sir Prederic indignantly. He rises, and going over to the Indian hearthrug, leans against the mantelpiece and glowers from that lofty position down upon Lady Maria. The edge of the Japanese screen touches the hearth-rug, and a slight leaning back of Sir Fred-erick would in all probability reveal to him the person htding behind it. Lady Maria becomes conscious of a sensation of faint-

"Don't stand there; so bad for your com plexion," stammers she inconsequently.

As Sir Frederic is standing manike wi his back to the fire, the suggestion about his complexion falls fist.

"I'm chilly," says he absently, and then, "Anxious about her—the woman who wilfully deserted me; who—"

"Once for all, Frederic, I decline to discuss your wife," mays Lady Maris frantically. "Talk of Taxation, servants, the education of the lower classes, any abominable subject you like, but not of Flora."
"I can't help it,', says Sir Frederic with an obstinate shake of his head. "You began it. You suggested I should or did feel anxiety for Fi-Lady Flora, and I insist noon showing you why...."

upon showing you why—"
"I quite understand, I assure you."
"You don't. You can't, or you wouldn't have spoken as you did. A man more barbarously treated than I have been has

Here, seeing the screen shake ominously,

Here, seeing the acreen shake ominiously, Lady Maria loses her head:
"Of course, of course. We all know that," cries she enthusiastically—fataily. The rorsen now seems to be the receptacle of an earthquake in an extremely advanced stage. Oh! those young women and their promises about their fingers and their ears. I'm strade i've promises about their nagers and their ed.
"I'm not well, Frederic; I'm tired; I've toothache, neuralgia, seistica, lumbago, tio-douloureux, everything!" almost screams Lady Maria. "I wisu you would go away. "You look all right," says Sir Frederic. "You look all right," says Sir Frederic, gazing at her with a sceptical eye. "What you really mean is, that you don't want to hear my exculpation. I don't blame you. She has been priming you with abuse of one, of course; but I meist on setting my saif right with you. You think Flora in the right, but she is mot; it is I who am in the right." striking his claushed. Set the right," striking his elenched fist against his breast in quite an alarming fachion

The "yes to be sure" that hangs on Lady Maria's agitated lips is checked in the bud by another evolution of the incipient earth-Good heavens! how long is this to last? And when the end comes how many survivors will there be?

"Look here," says Sir Frederic violently:
"once for all, you shall learn the truth.
She married me not knowing her own mind (which, apparently, is of a poor sort), and, tiring of me, sought occasion to regain her liberty. She never believed that story about me, but it served as a project for her and, tiring of me, sought occasion to regain her liberty. She never believed that story about me, but it served as a pretext for her plan —... She deliberately broke off all relations with me simply to suit herself, and with a full belief in her inmost soul and with a full belief in her inmost soul that I was innocent of the ridiculous charge she brought against me. Fhe——"

The screen goes over with a crash—a beautiful but furious young woman appears, standing in its place. It is a perfect transformation scene. Lady Maria falls beck in her chair half fainting; Sir Frederic, stepping back in wild astonishment, puts his foot on Lady Maria's Tabby, who doesn't faint at all, but acts up such a mean doesn't faint at all, but acts up such a mean. doesn't faint at ail, but sets up such a mec-owing as makes the welkin ring. All is confusion.

The cat is the first to recover; then the outraged goddess, who, advancing on her hasband, regards him with a glittering eye. "How dare you say that?" says she in s low but terror-striking tone. And now she turns to the hapless Lady Maria. "You itstened to him! you appleaded him! you took his part! you mid that I had treated him barbarously! Oh, Maria!"

Lady Maria makes an effort to explain, but speech is beyond her. She is chilled by Sir Frederic's eye, who now advances straight down upon her.

"And you knew she was there all the time—listening," with a scornful glance at Flora, who returns at four-fold. "You let me say what was in my mind without even eecking to check me; you—"

But this is too much for Lady Maris; such fragrant injustice restores to her her dignity. She rises to the occasion and her

" Once for all," says she sternly, "I am done with you; yes, with both of you. You are ungrateful—worthless—heartless! Hitherto I have done what I could for you. For the future you shall manage your own af-fairs without assistance from ms. You can make use of this room-of this house-of anything belonging to me, but of me-

She sails with much dignity from the

"There!" says Sir Frederic, turning round to his wife; "you have done it, as usual."

"Done what? I've done nothing. you who have done everything! And not satisfied with having insulted me, you come here and abuse me to Maria behind my

"I spoke only the truth. And you-was it fair to hide behind a screen and listen to what wasn't intended for you? There's an ugly name for that, you know," hotly.

"I don't care what ugly names you call me. Your opinion of me has ceased to be of any importance. And I wasn't listen ing! I kept my fingers tight in my ears ing! I kept my fingers tight in my ears until you had been here for hours; then my arms tired, and I——"
"Hours! I like tha," with a sardonic laugh; "I haven't been here f r twenty minutes vet.

"Oh, you could say anything," says Lady Blount, and brushing contemptuously pa him, she sinks into a lounging comer and takes up a magazine with an air of indifference that ought to have imposed upon any one. But Sir Frederic, being her husband, can read between the lines. Husbands are always difficult.

"Well, not a word of refutation?" says he mockingly. "You acknowledge then I spoke only the bare truth when I said that you sought occasion to get rid of me because you were tired of me."

"To refute that I must be rude; I must say you are lying," says Lady Flora delib-erately. "But that, after all, is scarcely a rudeness, as you know it without my telling "I know nothing of the sort. If the e is who told you I had anything whatsoever to do with Miss Drewry."

"I forbid you to mention that woman," starting to her feet and staring angrily at

"I see no reason why I shouldn't, "And all those frequent journeys to town a month after we were married; was there no reason for them, either?"
"Pienty of reason. Business took me to town on every occasion.'

"Why can't you think of something new?" says she scornfully, "Business. Was there ever a case of this sort when business wasn't the excuse for it?"

"I wonder who is your monitress!" may he with a short and most unmirthful laugh "she ought to be proud of herself, at all events. She has taught you a good deal of events. She has taught you a good deal of very unwearable stuff."

"I won't be sneered at by you," says she with a stamp of her pretty foot. "I came here hoping to avoid you; and—" she pauses—then, suddenly: "What brought you here to-day?"
"To see you!" returns he doggedly.
He his hardly prepared for the result of his speech. Lady Flora, after a moment's struggle, bursts into tears.

struggle, bursts into tears cries he, making a movement towards her. towards her.

"Don't attempt to call me by my name," sobs she passionately. "And don't think I am crying because of you. No, it is my self-esteem that is hurt; I cannot forget that I once--" she breaks down com-

"Did you once love me?" says he sadly. Then what is all this about? Flora, listen to me. Before my marriage I may have been what people call wild. There was too much gambling, too much champagne, too much—of many things better avoided, But from the day of our engagement, nay, from the day we first met, I had neither thoughts nor giances for any one but you. On my soul, I swear it. What can I say more?"

"On! it is too late," says she with a little daspairing gesture. "There are so many things not to be forgotten."

"Quite true!" returns he with spirit; there are many things, but as to their being never forgotten—well! There was your never forgotten—well! There was your flirtation with that fellow in the Hussars

"Captain Pierrepoint. Nonsense! I defy you to think I meant anything by that. A hideous, foolish, pale-eyed creature! No; when I mean that sort of thing I shall should be somehody, good looking?"

choose somebody good looking."

"Oh, will you indeed?" says he stiffly.

And then the absurdity of it strikes on them, and they both burst into a short but rather uncomfortable laugh. Still, it airs the atmosphere. the atmosphere.

"It is getting iate; you are going?" says she presently with much hospitality.
"Not at all. I hope Ledy Maria, in spite of all that has con e and gone, will give me my dinner."

"But I am staying here."

16 W ell?"

with me. Considering what I have endured already from you, I ballave you will be a very desirable addition to the feast; a veri-very desirable addition to the feast; a veritable sauce piquante."

"Well; I shan't dine with you."

"Why not, Flora?" says he suddenly, "Is it all so irrenediable? Think? We were happy once, and — Ohl darling, you are crying again. Make it up with me, Flora, and we'll let the past go hy us."

'Oh, but if it is true that you—that I—that it was all an untruth about that woman, you will never forgive," says she, pressing back from her his eager hands.

"Try me. What is there I wouldn't forgive you? But, ohl Flora, how could you have thought it?"

"I did'nt want to think it, but—" She gives way suddenly and flings her arms round his neck. "Freddy! Freddy! how good it is to be able to kies you again!" After this matters go very easily.

After this matters go very easily.

"But now you won't be able to go abroad," says she presently.

"Mhy not?"
"And leave me?" ball starting out of his arms. "Certainly not, We'll go together. I'd explain to the men I was going with, and make it straight with them, and then you and I will have a second honeymoon."

"Yes: we'll begin our life all over again."

Here she begins to ory a little and to clasp him closer.

"What is it, darling?"
"Nothing. Only every night since we parted I have prayed that I might die soon, and now I'm afraid that it willijbe answer

"Well, I've been praying that we might come together again, and spend a long life together, and my prayer is as good as yours any day, and imuch more senaible, so of course it will gain the day," says he; and if this is a plous lie on his part, I've no doubt

"It will be forgiven him.

"It ought to," says she hopefully. Then,
"Freddy! it is Onristmas Day. A lucky day to make it up isn't it?"

"A lucky day for me, certainly,"

"And for me, too. But Maria," nervous ly. "I don't see how we are to face her again."

rain."

At this moment the door opens and Lady Maria, who has not been able to restrain her curiosity any longer, appears on the breshold. The fact that the two before her start guittly asunder on her abrupt entrane explains all things to her.

"Well, I am glad!" ories she, her whole tace melting into one beaming smile.

A Curious Case.

BY B. B.

URING the last week of September, URING the last week of September, 1870, a young man, giving his name as Obsrices Brackett, called upon me in deep trouble. He saked me if I had a private room. I arcse at once, led the way to my consultation closest, closed the do r and turned the key in the lock. I pointed him to the sofa, taking my own seat at the table.

"Now," said I, "young man, what is it?" He started and eaughs his breath; and as he began to speak, I made up my mind that, let the case be what it would, he was not a guilty party. He was too fearful, too broken spirited and uniappy, for a criminal. The case, as he presented it, was as tillows:

tcllows: -He was employed as bookkeeper, and at times acted as cashier, in the wholesale es-tablishment of Arnold, Marriam & Co. For considerable time money had been mis ing from the funds of the firm, and at length suspicion had fallen upon himself. Said he, "I am situated peculiarly. My mother is an invalid; and I have two sisters and in the said that the said the said that the said that the said that the said that the —young indies. We four live together.

My father died when I was only twelve.
One of my sisters has to remain at home to one of my sisters has to remain at nome to take care of the house and to care for my mother; the other—two years younger than myself—gives; music lessons when she gets pupils. Our little house our father left, with a mortgage on it of three hundred pounds, which has remained ever since, until little more than four weeks ago, when we paid it off."

Then he stopped, hesitated, and choked, "How did you raise the money for that?" asked, quietly. "Must I tell you, sir?" he returned imploringly.

"Do you want me to defend you?"

"Yes, sir!" he answered quickly. "I was sent to you by—by a man who said you would help me."

Then I told nim, "You had better trust man I you do not me. It you do not-

There he interrupted me by seking if I would keep it secret. I told him he must trust me fully. I would do what was best, and of that he must leave me to judge. And after a little further positation he told

A young gentleman, whose parents we wealthy, and was himself; well off, had loved the music-teaching sister, Bells, a long time; and they were to be married during the coming antumn, and go at once to Paris. The young man was very anxious that his parents should not know, as they had other plans for his future. He—Bella's smanced—had furnished the money for paying off the mortgage, and, also, for repairing the house; and he had madel them all promise not to speak his name in competion. ise not to speak his name in conn with it.

I suspected at once who the man was. He was a member of the same club with my-"I suppose you don't mean use to have any dinner."

"On the contrary, I hepe you will dine contemplated matrimony, sub ross. So I looked at my visitor smilingly, and said,

"It is Albert Christopheri"
"Who told you?" he cried in wonder,
"Never mind," said f, "so long as you did not. And Christopher sent you to "All right. Now go on and tell me what has been done."

It appeared, from his further story, that Mr. Merriam had for several weeks suspected him, and when it had become known that the mortgage had been paid off, and when Brackett would not tell where the money had come from, but instead thereof trembled and turned pale, then the suspicious became confirmed, or nearly so.

then the suspicions became confirmed, or very nearly so.
"Two weeks ago," the young man want on, "Mr. Merriam gave me a package containing a hundred pounds, and told me to carry it into Winthrop Sturgis's counting room, and sek them to forward it to Colonel Waiter Pennington, at hiverpool. Colonel Pennington was in business there, and corresponded with both our houses. We had wool of him. Perhaps you know, air, Sturgis is in the same line that we are in. Well, Sturgis had told our folks that he was going to make a remittance to the he was going to make a remittance to the Colonel, and offered to take the sum they wished to forward and cover it in his check.

wished to forward and cover it in his check.
"I carried the money to Sturgis's place, and in the counting-room found only his head book-keeper, Damon Wadleigh, at his deak. It was somewhere between one and two o'clock. I gave the money to Wadleigh, and he opened the package—it wasn't seeled—and counted it—just one hundred overed. He saked me if I wasned a repounds. He asked me if I wanted a receipt. I told him he had be ter give me a line, just to show that it had been received in that honge. He wrote a simple acknowledgement of the reception of the amount. I took it, and ran the biotter over it; then colded it up and put it into my west maket. folded it up and put it into my vest pocket, and went to my dinner. Before returning to the store—the weather had grown cooler than it was in the morning—I changed my trousers and vest for thicker ones, and I forgot the receipt in the vest pooket. That night when I went home it was not to be found, and I have not been able to find it

"I'm almost finished, sir.[Just one week from the day on which I paid the money in at Sturgis's, Mr. Morrism received a letin at Storgis's, Mr. merriam received a tet-ter from Colonel Pennington, in which, at the end—after the business—occurred this passage:—'My dear old fellow, when are you going to let me hear from you? I haven't been blessed by your kind remem-brance I don't know when.'"

"When was that?" I saked.
"Tareday atr."

"Last week—Tuesday, sir."
"And you gave the money in at Sturgis's counting room when?"
"The Tuesday before that, sir—the thir-

"The Tuesday before that, sir—the thir-teenth of the present month of Septem-

I nodded for him to go on.

"After Mr. Merriam had showed me the letter, and told me to read that sentence, he asked me if I was sure I had given that money to be sent to Colonel Pennington. You can imagine I was indignant; but I didn't know then how much I'd been suspected. I held in as best I could, and told him I had given the money into the hands of the book-keeper, Damon Wedleigh. During the afternoon he—Merriam—called in at Sturgis's, and, sir—oh, I can't understand it!—they all—Storgis and Wadleigh, and all there employed—swear that they never saw the money!

"I forgot to say, sir, that Mr. Merriam never saw the money?

"I forgot to say, sir, that Mr. Merriam saked me if I took a receipt; and it was when I confessed the loss of that that my heart began to quake. Yes, sir, they swear—all in the counting room—that they never saw the money. Mr. Sturgie says he filled out a check, as he had said he should, on the afternoon of the thirteenth instant, and posted it to Colonel Penrington, at Liverpool, but nothing had been "received—su nothing had been covered in—on account of Merriam and Uo."

Then, in broken secents, the young man

Then, in broken secents, the young man told me that he had been seemed of embessiement; had been brought before a magistrate for preliminary examination, and bound over to appear in October. The evidence before the justice had been deemed by most of those present as conclusive.

evidence before the justice had been deemed by most of those present as conclusive.

There was the case. Brackett said he had searched in vain for the receipt. But the missing receipt was not all. The lifting of the mortgage from the house told heavily against him.

He had himself paid the money, and the business had been done in his name. Yet he had utterly refused to tell where the money had come from, and had almost cried—had fairly shed tears—when pressed and badgered on that point. That the satute justice had taken as a sure sign of guilt.

I saked him if he suspected Damon I saked him if he suspected Damon Wadleigh of having appropriated the money to his own use. He shook his head dubiously. He knew not what to think. He and Wadleigh had siways been most excellent friends, though he had never been able to keep exactly the expensive company that Damon did.

"But, mind you," he added, "I don't mean to intimate by that that he ever lives beyond his means."

I thought the matter over. Resilv and lives beyond his means."

I thought the matter over. Really and sincerely, I believed my client innocent.
"Look here," said I, as the thought struck mee did Colonel Pennington speak, in the letter which Merriam showed to you, of the second due to him from word. of the amount due to him from your firm?"

"I am very sure he did not," replied the youth. "He (the Colone) and Arnold Merriam were college-mates, and have been close friends ever aims. My thought of the passage was that he had missed his old friend's chatty letters."

I had shout made up my mind to send the young man away until the next day, that I might think, and, perhaps, investi-gate, when the thought occured to me—a thought so simple, so exceedingly simple, that it had not found lodgement before— "What does Colonel Pennington say about Brackett did not know. He was very sure the Colonel had not been written to.

"Well," said I, "let us begin at the bottom. The money was for Colonel Pennington. If there has been no wrong done by anybody, he should have received it."

And , sat down and wrote as follows:—

"To Colonei Wm. Pennington, Liverpool.
"Have you received one nundred pounds, which shoud have been forwarded to you from Arnold Merriam on the 18.h instant?
Answer immediately to me."

I signed my name, gave it to Charles Brackett, bade him take it to the telegraph comes, and wait for an answer.

In a little more than haif an hour the young man was back, and here is what Colonel Pennington telegraphed:—

"The money was paid into my own hands on the day named—one hundre! pounds. "Walter Persungton."

I was not satisfied with that, I w I was not stilled with that. I was now sure that, in some way, the Colonel had received the money. But how? Before I made my appearance to the accusers, I wished to be whole-footed. So I wrote wanted to be whole-rooted. So I wrote another telegram, asking the Colonel to send to me at ones, by telegraph, a full and explicit statement of how he had received the money, and let it come at my expense.

This despatch Brackett took away, and the clock was striking six as he came back with the answer

Here it is-the body of it:-

On Tuesday, the 13th instant, shortly there is the latter of the lat leigh prothers—I never could tell them apart—and be gave me a package contain ing one hundred pounds, saying it had been left only a few minutes before by one been left only a few minutes before by one of Merriam's people. In my driving hurry I put the money into my pocket. Wadleigh said nothing about a receipt, and I didn't stop to think of it. And I have hardly thought of it since till I received your telegram. What's up?

"WALTER PERNINGTON."

"Ho, ho!" I cried, when I had read.
"Another case of Twine! A thousand pounds to a penny that you gave that money to Pythias Wadleigh instead of

And so it proved. Damon and Pythias And so it proved. Damon and Pythias Wadieigh were twin brothers, as like as two pees in a ped. Upon a critical overhauling of events in the past, it appeared that on that Tuesday noon—the 18th—Pythias changed to drop into Sturgis's counting room when his brother was there alone.

Damon was famishing for his lunch, and he asked Pythias to remain on the pre-mises while he went out; and so it had been

So, when Charles Brackett dropped in, he found Pythias, instead of Damon; but did not know it.

When Colonel Pennington looked in at Merriam's piace, he found it empty, and moved on. He reached Sturgis's not more than two minutes after Brackett had gone; Pythias, knowing him so well and so intimately, had given him the money as a matter of course, and thought no more of it. Half an hour later, when his arother returned, he came later, when his erother returned, he came to company with two customers, full of business; so the subject of the Colonel and his money was not touched upon. And from that time the two brothers had not met until this strange business called them

Mr. Merriam, and others concerned, made all the reparation in their power.
On the merchant's promise of due cirto bim of Brackett's ability to pay off the mortgage on his mother's house; so the last bur-den of doubt was lifted from his mind, and he was in the right humor to give his young clerk an advance in position.

Love is always in order, and always in-teresting, if it be true love; and that leads me in closing, to say that Albert Christo-pher and Beila Brackett were married before the anow flew; and his parents, when they had come to know his accomplished young wife, were perfectly reconciled, and even happy.

ANCESTRY OF THE TAME GOOSE ANGESTRY OF THE TAME GOOSE.—The common tame goose of this country had his ancestry in Europe, and is descended from wild birds that had been domesticated, though it varies considerably in color from its progenitors, yet less than ducks and other fowls do from their wild originals. It tends to a general gray, especially the female, while the male is often wholly white. The many weight of a good goose. white. The usual weight of a good goose is fifteen or sixteen pounds, but by cramming with nourishing food this weight is for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animais probably object one method em-would probably object one method em-ployed for the fattening of the goose.

Many ages ago it was discovered that by confining and preventing motion, employ-ing fattening diet and cometimes stupefy-ing substances the body of the bird would become loaded with fat in a comparatively short time. It was during the reign of Louis XIV that a thrifty French market woman discovered a way to restrain her geese from wandering by nafting their feet to a board. This enabled her to fatten the geese rapidly and her product was in great demand, as the enlarged and diseased livers of her birds were in request for passe de fois gras, which from that day to this have been greatly esteemed by the epicures.

The Chinese have for centuries led the world in the cultivation and education of this bird, bringing it into a high state of perfecticn in size and flavor. The goose is long lived when allowed to ruminate and prolong its days, having been known to live to be 100 years old. It has been alleged that a goose of this old age finds its way to market. The hebit of hissing et un pleasing performances is imitated from the goose, and was much indulged in by our snees. performances is imitated from the goose, and was much indulged in by our ancestors when the strictal entertainments were not to their liking. It may be remarked, however, that the hise has fallen into innocuous desustude, and no matter how bad a performance may be the dreaded sibilant symptom of disepprobation is never more heard. Of source, no -ritiols on the goose would be complete without a pessing allusion to the goese that saved Rome, one night when the electric light had gone out and the watchmen were at a benefit ball.

CRIMA'S POPULATION.—A writer in the North China Heraid, discussing the cause North China Heraid, discussing the causes of the increase in the population of China and the increasing energy of the Chinese race which enables it to absorb other peoples; and always to conquer in the struggle for existence, remarks that the end of the seventeenth capture that the end of the seventeenth century tha the end of the seventeenth century that the population went beyond 60 000,000. From that period onward it has grown continuously in spile of famines, wars and pestilence, and is overflowing into other countries and causing political disquietude.

countries and causing political disquistade.

The causes of this are a mild and paternal government, the extension of foreign trade and the spread of emigration.

In this period there ere two great reigns, which insted about sixty years each, the greater number of which were years of profound tranquility and beneficent legislation.

ent legislation.
The educational system also, which ex tends to every village and leads to the vasingresse of persons connected with teaching and literature, and to a multiplication of occupations, has stimulated the increase of population, while foreign trade has vastly increased the number of persons engaged in agriculture.

The cultivation of all k has grown enormously under the influence of the foreign export, and with it the numbers of persons export, and with it the numbers of persons exgaged in mulberry trees, feeding slik-worms, epinning, weaving, wnolessle and retail trade in slik, etc.

Out of 380 000 000 of which the population is, according to the latest official statistics, composed, about 1 in 10 is engaged in agriculture 1 in 100 is a bricklayer or meson, 1 in 120 is a taitor, 1 in 140 a blacksmith, and 1 in 9 a washerman, while about 1 in 100 is a carpenter. All these classes are benefited by and increase and multiply with foreign trade.

Lastly, emigration has caused an increase in the population to a remarkable degree. The places of those who leave are soon filled up, and when the emigrants return with their wealth they resot upon the general prosperity, and consequently the population, by putting their capital late local enterprises and thus adding their quota to the wealth of the nation. wealth of the nation

Assert Mindmoness —One of the greatest authorities upon siquette that ever lived said, "When I see a man absent in mind, I choose to be absent in body." It is most discouraging to attempt to hold a conversation with any one who when perforce brought back to a realisting sense that they are being talked to, gaze at their visavis with a vacant stare, and either snewer at random or beg pardon for not having understood the remark. It is a blow to one's self-esteem to find that the sweetness of his words has been wested upon the desert air. A SEEMT MINDEDNESS .- One of the great

It is really as estimatory to converse with a deaf and dumb person as with absent minded one. "A fool never h absent minded one. "A fool never has thought, a maiman has lost it, and an absent man is for the time without it." In this world people must have their wits about them and keep their eyes open, or they will find they are losing their best obances, and the wideawake man is running far ahead. An absent mind is a weakness which may be either outlivated or overcome that is the end it will be tound that ercome; but in the end it will be found that the quick wit and ever-ready attention meet with the greatest success in life, a result of thorough knowledge and under-standing of the world.

OILING THE WAVES.—There can be no doubt that the use of oil for the walety doubt that the use of oil for the watery of vessels in stormy weather is becoming more general. A Norwegian engineer directs attention to the important point of selecting the most suitable oil. "A fat, heavy arimsi oil, such as train oil, whale oil," etc., he says, "is decidedly the best, but as these oils in cold weather become thick and partly lose their ability to spres it is advisable to add a thinner mineral oil Vegetable ols have also proved serviceable. Mineral oils, especially refined ones, are the least effective. Orude petroleum can be used in case of need, but refined petroleum is hardly any good at all.

WHATEVER you dislike in another person take care to correct in yourself by the gentle reproof.

AT MOME AND ABBOAD.

The refusal of a Detroit street our com-pany to receive coppers from passengers brought cut the fact not generally known that one, two, three and five cent pieces are legal tenders up to twenty-five cents, while ten, twenty, twenty five and fifty cent pieces are legal tenders up to $10.

The history of the adoption of foreign words into a language is very singular, though the motive is always the same. We want a word to express an idea, and we take it from another language rather than coin one on our own behalf. At one time we used to borrow largely from France. There is quite a little wonabulary of terms like ensue, laisaer aller, same froid, to show the kind of ideas for which we had occasion, but had not terms. Now, however, the balance is all the other way. Export trade is large, and our imports from France at least, small. We have given them the most unexpected kind of words—such as meeting, attraction, high life, "select, clubmen, and the singular phrase, "time is money."

A curious loss in the mails is told of in a Boston paper: "At Obristmas time some person out of town inclosed a gold ring in a letter sea gift to a friend in the city. When the letter was delivered the ring was found to be missirg, and a deancut circular hole through the envelope showed how it had escaped. A search was instituted, and it was found that the jetter containing the ring had been placed in the package, beside a packet containing quite a large sum of money in greenbacks. The package, beside a packet containing quite a large sum of money in greenbacks. The weight of mail matter upon the bag containing these letters had forced the ring through the envelope in which it was contained and nearly through the package of greenbacks, in which it was found imbedded. When the money packet was opened the ring dropped out, together with a large number of circular fragments of greenbacks of the exact size of the ring, which had been out out as nearly as with a dis."

King Carlos of Portugal, who possesses sixteen Christian names, while his younger brother answers to no less than thirty, is personally one of the most amisble of monpersonally one of the most amisble of monsrehs. He is a handsome, bloods young man, who cerrise himself with a military air, and is credited by his personal friends with considerable decision of character.
He is a devoted sportsman, an accomplished musicien, speaks seven languages, and paints in water colors—in short, he is a bit of a savant, like his relative, the unincky ex-Emperor Dom Pedro. The Queen is believed to be popular. She is tail and handsome, and was very exrefully educated. She does not share her husband's passion for music, but is a student of hislever sketcher. She speaks French, Portuguese, English and German. She is said to take a deep and intelligent interest in public affairs, and to be exceedingly fond of her adopted country.

The tailors of Austria should do well, An Imperial decree which has been recently promulgated from Viensa directs that every Austrian civil servant, be he of high rank or of low, shall beneeforth always wear a uniform. The uniform is in every case to consist of a green frock coat, grey trousers, military cap, aword, and doeskin gloves, with a utilitary overcost for cold or wet weather. The civil servants, of whom, it is said, there are fully three-quarters of a million, are divided by the decree into four cat gories and eleven ranks; and these are to be distinguished one from another by the color of the facings on their coats. These colors are of all hues of the rambow, from the faintest entary yellow to the richest violet. On gala eccessome the civil servants are to substitute green arousers for their gray ones, and to wear trovers for their gray ones, and to wear trovers for their gray ones, and to wear cocked hats instead of caps. Hitherto, ser-vents of the State of Austria have dressed like ordinary citizens. For the future, they are to dress like soldiers.

It is interesting to note how the Em-presses and Princesses of Germany confer with their dresmakers. Not one of the latter ever sees her august patron face to face, but whenever an order la to be given TP 100 18 38 gO face, but whenever an order is to be given a lady-in waiting instructs a business establishment as to the exact requirements of the royalties. Hampirs and models are then sent to the palace, where they are received by the lady in waiting, and by her submitted to the Royal ladies. It happens only on very rare occasions that a dress is "fitted" by the dressmaker, the lady's maid at the palace undertaking to look to that important detail. Nor is any measure taken in the usual way, but a well fitting bodies is handed to the "artist in dress," and she has to be guided by that alone. and she has to be guided by that alone. Years ago the old Empress Augusta had a model of her figure made, on which all her drasses were fitted. In ordering new costumes the Royal and Imperial ladies aitumes the Royal and Imperial ladies always wish to be informed whether a model to which they take a fancy has already been copied for any other Court, as they object to wearing the same contume as another sugustiady, should they perchance meet in public or in society.

1 4

Sunday school teacher—"Who was it that went down to Jericho and fell among thieves?' Smart Pupil-"You can't play it, teacher. You want me to my I don't know, and then ask you, and then you're going to spring McGinty onto u.e. You can't play no McGinty drives on me."

Our Young Folks.

PETER PIPER'S PROMISE

BY & U. W.

Peter Piper walked along the top of the ten-wall, with his little bare feet clinging fearlessly to the very edge, and seemed stope deaf to all the jeers of the boys who were following him. He had been called offly so often that he really would have been startled if he had been clever. As to his name, Peter it certainly was, but Piper it was not by rights, yet he was never known by any other outside his own home. It had been given to him because he was always blowing a penny whistle.

"Helios, lad, what are you thinking about?" said a cheery voice from below.
"Where's your whistle, I should like to

"Here it is, Jack," said Peter, suddenly coming to a full stop, and throwing himself flat on the wall.

He well knew to e voice that was speaking, for the owner of it was one of his few

"Why aren't you piping to-day, lad? Nothing wrong at home is there? A queer daz si look came into the boy's eyes, as he peered down, and said-

"Dear, dear," muttered the old man to himself. "There's that daft look again. I don't believe be understood a word of while I said to him. I used to think it was awful to lose both your legs as I may say I have done since that paralysis came on, but since I've known Peter I say to myself very often 'I'm thankful I've got my wita.'
Give us a tune, boy," added the cripple. "It's mighty dull down here sometimes, and I do believe all the folks have gone of to Barton Fair. I haven't taken a penny this morning."

Peter seated himself on the edge of the all and played the tunes which he know his old friend-who employed his time in making nets-loved best. Suddenly, just as Peter was making a very clever shake in "Home, sweet home," his whitele fell from his bands, and he dropped off the wall se if he had been shot,

Jack broke his netting-needle with the start he gave as the bare feet knocked egainst his best head, then called out anxiously-"Are you hurt, boy? ever made you do that?" What-

Peter Piper did not answer Jack, but, saving found his whistle, he sped like s deer along the sand, keeping so close to -wall that he actuatly touched it with his shoulder now and the

"What mischief has that youngeter been after now?" said a fisherman, coming up from behind Jack's chair. "Hi, stop thist?"

"You just let him be, Jacob, He's as sermiess as a baby."

Then what on earth does he go and bolt off like that for, just when he saw me? A boy ought not to fly like that at the sight of his sieher. One would think he had ploked someone's pocket, if there was any pocket

"It's Sarton Fair week remember." said sok, "and that takes the folk away."

"And brings a lot of a kind we don't care about, I expect," said Jacob grimly. caught sight of two of the ngilest looking pers just before I turned down to find you."

Peter had run about a mile when the see wall came to an end, and the natural cliffs took its piace; then he walked quietly along till he entered a cave, known as the "rocky partor,"

At the back of the cave there was a small opening, and evidently one well-known to Peter, for when he came to it he turned round, tay flat down on his face and pushed his legs in, till his whole body was entely out of sight of anyone who might come

Thus. lying flat, with his whistle still grasped in his right hand, Peter Piper listened. But those for whom he was watching were long in coming; and what wonder, then, that he slept?

He was awoke suddenly by the sound of angry words in the cave. Two men, the very two whom his father had so little admired, were quarreling.

Peter streatched forward till his eyes were out of his shelter and he could see the men. Peter had been to Barton Fair, ithe everyone else at Sandton, and had been cheated out of his only sixpence by one of those men. It was when following them to beelf by any means he could get the money out of them that be overheard them plot to steal the big new fishing note which some of the Sandton fishermen had lately bought and which were generally to be seen drying on the see-wall

Pour knew that his father's were emongst the new ones which the mem d to steal; and in a quiet way he had kept a sharp look out on their movement ever since. He knew that they often sat in the "rocky parior" to make their plans, and he had many a time hidden in the little passage from the boys who were inclined to tease him. So when, just as he was playing to old Jack. he caught sight of the two waiking along the wall, he felt sure they were making their way to the parior; and he determined to be there first and hear as much of their plans as he could.

Now he lay, eagerly listening; but straining forward suddenly to eaten every word, he knocked his head against the rock, and cried out with the pain. It was only a low ery, but one of the men heard it. In two minutes they had dragged poor Peter from his hiding-piace, and one held bim in a grip of iron while the other stormed at him for watching them.

They knew the boy was half daft, or probably they might have done him some mischief. As it was, they contented themsoives with making use of him. "Now mind, youngster, you have promised. If you break your promise I'll throw you off the harbor, and it's little chance you'll have of swimming to shore. You'll play that whistie on the wall from seven o'clock till we've got the nets in this cave. If you see anyone coming you'll stop piping, and we can bolt.

He had given his promise, wondering in his simple mind how he could manage to eave his own life and save the nets too.

"Now you just stay in this place till seven o'clock; you needn't try to get off home to warn them, for we shall be hanging about up above, just to get the people used to the sight of us, and if I catch you putting your nose above the sea-wall, well-" a shake by way of emphasis set Peter trembling.

He was soon left alone, and sat wander ing what he could do. No one was in sight; and evidently the men had gone up to the top of the wall by the way by which they came. Then suddenly an idea came to the poor boy's mind; Jack, Jack could help

He started off once more, going, if possibie, nearer to the cliffs than he had gone before, soudding along with head down and a set purpose shown in his face.

On, on, with never a look behind, till he turned the corner which had hidden Jack from view. What if he had already gone home, disgusted by the want of customers? No, there he was, and there, too, was Jack's constant friend and messenger, Tiger, a little fox-terrier, as unlike its savage namemke as could be.

In eager breathless sentences the boy told old Jack the plot he had listened to, and the promise he had made,

Then Jack thought a few minutes, and having his upon a good plan, he teld Peter not to be frightened, but to sest himself on the wall by the last net, as he had promised, and go on playing weadily. "Let 'em get them all over the wall, lad, and then, when they drop down after them, don't you leave off playing, but just change your tune to 'Tom, Tom, the Piper's son,' Take my word for it, we will astonish those rescally fellows, and-

"You won't let them drown me?"

"Not a bit of it, lad. Trust to me, and be off, in case they go to look for you. Here, take my dinner with you, or you'll be hungry. I'll get some more somehow."

Hwiftly the boy returned to the cave unobserved by anyone, and, after eating his dinner, lay down to rest.

Jack waited till the boy was out of sight, then he scribbled something on a piece of paper and gave it to Tiger. The dog was kept to be a means of communication between the cripple and his young son, who worked at the mill; and in less than balf an hour two men who were walking about the wall saw a young fellow pulling the invalid chair in which Jack was usually carried home up the steep slope which led from the sands to the "Parade."

"That old fellow's gone," muttered one; "so much the better for us."

They did know so much as we do, you

Peter slept for so long that he could hardly believe it when one of the gipsies woke him with a kick and told him it was nearly six.

"I'm glad you've kept your word," he said not unkindly; "now finish your work, and you shall have five shillings for your-

Peter was stient, too anxious and terrified to speak. No wonder that he trembled se he took his post at seven o'clock, and began asking, by means of his whistie, "What are the wild waves saying?"

He did not look up, but he could feel that the men were near. At last the net close to him was moved. He had purpossly sat down on a bit of it. It was the last of the lot.

A second's pause, and then Peter changed the tune. Clearly, shrilly, though with a little trembling sound about them, rang out the notes of "Tom, Tom, the Piper's on"-but before Tom received the besting which he richly deserved there was a shout and a scuffle, as balf a dezen fishermen, who had been hiding round the point, selsed the thieves.

Then Peter's courage gave way, the whistle dropped from his hands as it had done once before, and he followed it in still more headlong fashion-knocking down one of the fishermen as he fell on the top of him.

So Peter kept his promise, and yet saved the nets, and he was proud indeed when the grateful fishermen presented him with a real flute. Prouder still when his father kissed him tenderly and whispered, "You piped to some purpose that day, my lad. The parson do say that we have all got our own work to do in the world, and that no one else could fit just right in our place, and I don't believe there's any boy could have done so well as my little Peter."

ABOUT ELEPHANTS.

BY SHEILA.

Let me see," said Alan, counting on his fingers: "we have had horses, dogs, and cais. What is it to-day, Lillian?"

"What animal carries the most luggage?" said Lillian, replying, Irish fashion, with another question.

"Oh, I see: we are going to have elephants to-day."

His sister laughed.

"My little dear, you must wait and see," and then she began to read.

"'Fiction' elephants are not, to my thinking, so interesting as 'fact' ones, for the good reason that it is impossible to make common domestic pets of them, and so they can only be put into storries and poems of a certain kind.

"Perhaps ancient Eastern heroes had their attendant faithful elephants, just as our ancient heroes rejoiced in wonderful horses or dogs of uncommon strength and intelligence. However that may have been, we know that the elephant of the present day is a clever fellow, gifted with such a memory that he never forgets anything done to him in the way of kindness or the reverse.

"I was much amused at a story I read of a lady who often went to see a large elephant, and always took him something to

"One day the grateful animal picked her up with his trunk and put her on his back: a mark of affection which made the poor lady shrick with alarm.

"She implored the keeper to rescue her from her perilons position, but the man advised her to keep perfectly still; so there sue had to remain until my Lord Elephant kindly lifted her down again, when, as you may imagine, she got out of reach of that long trunk as fast as possible.

"Riephants figured in the armies of very ancient times, and we read that the sovereigns of India used them in fighting against Alexander the Great, that the Carthaginians hoped to frighten the Romans with them.

"When Tiberius was Emperor of Rome, twelve elephants were brought into the amphitheatre, where they did wonderful things, danced, sat at table, and tate and drank very decently.'

"An old writer, Christopher Acosta, tells us gravely that in the kingdom of Malabar the elephants 'talk together, and speak with man's voice.

"There was,' he says, in the city of Cochin an elephant which carried things to the haven, and laboured in scafaring mat-tors. "When he was weary, the governor of the piace did force him to draw a gallay from the bayen into the sea

"The elephant refused it; the governor gave him good words, and at last entreated him to do it for the King of Portugal, Hereupon the elephant was moved, and repeated these two words clearly, "Heo, hoo!" which in the language of Malabar is, "I will, I will!" and he presently drew the ship into the sea.

"I think this remarkable animal certainly deserves a place among those 'famed in fiction,"

"The first elephant that went to England was one sent as a present to James I, by the King of Spain.

"Five camels were also included in the gift; and when they all passed through

London at midnight, the people jumped out of their beds to look and wonder at

"James was highly delighted with this addition to his menagerie; not so the lord treasurer, who grambled at the expense of keeping such eaters, and looked very blank when, in the blessed greatonsness of his Mejesty's disposition,' one bundred and fifty pounds was ordered to be given to the Spaniard who brought them over.

"Poor man, he certainly was to be pitied, for a hard matter it was to get money enough to supply all the wants of his artravagant master.

"King James' elephant came from India; and the first specimen from Africa seen in the miand was the noted Jumbo, who was only about the size of a Shetland pony when he arrived.

"I daresay you remember the fues that was made when he was shout to leave.

"A sort of Jumbo madness set int presents poured in from all quarters, some of them very absurd ones, and not likely to be of any service to him under any circum. stances whatever.

"What, for instance, could the most intelligent of elephants do with a sewing-machine, or with boxes of eigers and snuff?

"Baskets of hot-house grapes did not come amiss to him, for he devoured both; b the six desen oysters sent by an admirer must have puzzled him-if he ever received them, which I should say is donbuful.

"An elephant in the Jardin des Plantes at Paris was quite a noted character in his way, and a merry wag into the bargain. On his way from Bordeaux -- where he landed-to Paris, it was found that the hard roads hurt his feet, to a shoemaker made him four boots, in which he tramped along quite comfortably.

"These were hung up afterwards in his stable, and children who came to the Jardin were pretty sure to want to go and see the elephant' boots.

"The latter had a comical trick of sinking down in his pond until only the tip of his trunk was visible, and then of suddenly coming to the surface and sending a great shower of water out of his trunk over the people who stood by.

"He seemed to think this a capital joke; and used to come up as quickly as he could to catch them before they could run away. "On, they are cunning creatures, these siephants! Don't you think sof

"Two that belonged to a travelling menagerie caught cold, and had a fit of the shivers.

"The keeper dosed them with whiskey, and the next day they were quite well; but no sooner did they see the keeper than they began to shiver violently, for they liked their medicine so much.

"White elephants are thought a great deal of in some parts of the East. "At the court of Siam the chief white elephant ranks next the queen; the king pays homage to it, and it is addressed as Sublime Grandeur,'

"Then it has a court of its own, and is lodged in a palace, and when it appears in public is loaded with jewels.

"Some time ago a white elephant went suddenly mad, and killed several of his

"No one may kill or injure one of these secred animals, so what would have happened I cannot imagine if his Sublime Grandeur had not dashed into a court of the palace where it was possible to shut him in. "There the poor frantic creature peat itself against the walls until at dropped dead

"The ruler of Siam calls himself King of the White Elephants', and whenever one is crught great rejoicings take place.

"All the nobles come to court to pay their respects to the elephant, and each one is expected to bring the king a present in money.

uff the king wishes to ruin one of his subjects he presents him with a white elephant.

"The unfortunate man may not sell it or give it away; on the contrary, he must treat it like a prince, and this costs so much that in the end he becomes a beggar.

"Then, I suppose, the king steps in and graciously agrees to receive his royal gift back again.

"An elephant named Paugul (not a white one this time) used to be very particular about its load.

"It would carry no more than a certain amount, and one day an officer, getting angry about this, threw a tent-peg at his head. Paugul took no notice at the time, says the Rev. J. Wood, who tells us this tale; but one day be met that officer, and then he picked him up, lodged him in a tamerind tree, and there left him to get down as best he might."

A SUMPER.

A soft sweet ripple comes over the sea;
The sun since size so his police reat;
And you are salking aloss with me,
While a giory fails on the crimson West.

A tender light over mean and hill,
Like a mystical veil of beauty lies;
And our hearts in the silence stir and thrill,
And your soul holes out of your describing or

See yonder, Love! where the lights begin
To falat and fade in the parple air, and the strange sweet serrow creeps dumbly in
That the heart of the Beautiful aye doth bear.

Darling! I know that your soul grows shill, And your heart is full of a varue regret, As the glory fades from each radiant hill. And the shadows fall where the wen has sot,

Yet, dear, in the future you cloud with doubt, Our hearts will love as they love to-day. The light of our loving can na or die out, Nor our souls, unheeding, walk far away.

ABOUT PINELS.

The sucking fish was long a popular character in sea stories. Wild and isbulous stories they were. This little fish was said to adhere to the bottoms of ships, and to a rrest their progress as suddenly as if they had struck on a rock.

The winds might do their best, the sails might fill and the masts creak, but— "The sacking fish with secret chains Clung to the keel, the swiftest ship detains."

It could hold the ship against everything, and confine her to the same spot just as if she were at anchor.

The dolphin was the sacred fish of the ancient Greeks, and was by them credited with many fabulous attributes.

It was supposed to be peculiarly friendly to the human race, and in many old stories appears as eaving the lives of favored beroes.

The crab in legends of the sea is conspicuous for shrewdness and ingenuity, in proof of which the following table may be

It agreed one day to compete with the fex as to which could run fastest. The fex started, and the crab caught hold of its tail and held fast till they reached the goal. On getting there the fex turned round to see how far he had outdistanced his opponent and to make fun of him. As he did so the crab slipped quietly down, crossed the winning line, and surprised the fex with—

"What! come at last, are you? I have been here some time."

When on the ocean one should beware of scale. Witches, it is said, have often been known to change themselves into scale, and to follow mariners and fishermen.

A singular superstition regarding the seal used to be current in the Farce Islands. It was believed to cast its akin every ninth night, assume a human form, and dance and muse itself like a human being, until it resumed its akin and became once more a seal.

Many tales were told of skins being captured, and the seals being obliged to retain their human shape till they could become repossessed of them.

There is an Icelandic superstition too about the seal, that if a man eats of its liver and gives it to his friend, the two will become enemies for life.

Amongst the myths of the sea few are more widespread, or are alluded to more frequently in literature, than those which deal with mermaids and mermen, especially those connected with mermaids. They have been stoutly believed in, but upon unsatisfactory evidence, from very early ages.

The typical mermaid has the head and body of a woman, usually of surpassing beauty, but below the waist she is fashioned like a fish with scales and fins—the fishy half is sometimes depicted as doubly tailed.

She has long and lovely hair, and is fond of sitting in the moonlight combing it with one hand whilst with the other she holds a looking glass. To these features she adds a sweet and melodious voice.

Notices of mermaids are to be found in abundance in books of bygone times: some rather vague, but others almost photographic in their details.

The legends in which these young women of the sea play a part represent them as postessed of considerable powers. Mow and then they reveal the future, and enrich people of the human race with supernatural gifts.

Often they marry mortals, but afterwards leave them and return to their true bome. At other times they fall in leve with mortals, and entice there to go and live below the water. Hermen, the, sometimes win the affection and capture the person of earthly maidens.

The simplicity of the public has been often imposed on by the exhibition in shows of artificial mermaids. The Japanese are said to be very skillul in their manufacture. One was exhibited early in this century. It was constructed of "the skin of the head and shoulders of a monkey, which was attached to the dried skin or a fish of the salmon kind with the head cut off, and the whole was stuffed and highly varnished, the better to deceive the eye."

It was said to have been "taken by the crew of a Dutch vessel from on board a native Malacca boat, and from the reverence shown to it, it was supposed to be a representation of one of their idel gods."

The sea serpent is a mythical monster that often figures in nautical yarns The most sensational accounts of its doings are to be found in the early Norse writers, one of whom-after giving its dimensions as two hundred feet long and twenty feet round-describes it as not only eating calves, sheep, and swine, but "disturbing ships, rising up like a mast, and sometimes anapping some of the men from the deck," the narrative being illustrated with a vivid representation of the animal in the very act. Many tales of the sea serpent are to be reckoned as nothing but articles of folklore, but at the same time there is a natural history side to the subject

KIND WORDS .- They never blister the tongue or lips; and we have never heard of one mental trouble arising from this quarter. Though they do not cost much, yet they accomplish much. They help one's good nature and good will. Soft words soften our own souls; angry words are fuel to the flame of wrath, and make it blaze more flercely. Kind words make other people good natured; cold words freeze people, and hot words scorch them, and bitter words make them wrathful. There is such a rush of all other kinds of words in our days that it seems desirable to give kind words a chance among them. There are vain words, and idle words, and hasty words, and spiteful words, and silly words, and empty words, and protane words, and boisterous words, and warlike words. Kind words also produce their own image on men's souls; and a beautiful image it is. They soothe, and quiet, and comfort the hearer. They shame him out of his sour, morose, unkind feelings. We have not yet begun to use kind words in such abundance as they ought to be used.

Brains of Bold.

Go not to aleep in malice,
Every morning is a new mercy.
All is not gained that is gathered.
None but the victous deride virtue.
A covetous person is always in want.
Anger restrained, is conquest gained.
Virtue has many preachers, few marty

Anger restrained, is conquest gained.
Virtue has many preachers, few martyrs.
Passion leaves us weaker than it finds us.
Rather fellow the wise than lead the fool-

Bad is the condition that loather admoni-

Prepare for the worst, and hope for the best.

Desire rather to be innecent than to ap-

None are more rich than those who are content.

Nothing essential to happiness is unattainable.

If you meanest to advance, eye those before thee.

Men may be judged of by their associates

Diffidence and caution are preservatives from error, Sin may be clasped so close we cannot

It is not difficult to get the best of those who love ss.

One of the subliment things in the world is plain trath. Experience keeps a dear school, but fools will lears in no other.

Never induige a victous thought, less into action it be brought.

A man's first care should be to avoid the reproaches of his own beart, and his next to avoid the censure of the world.

Senanality not only debases both body and mind, but dulis the keep edge of pleasure.

Femininities.

Neglected hours, like neglected women

Time never passes so slowly and tedi-

A woman is different from a phonograph. The phonograph only talks back as much as you talk to it.

A young lady recently lost har temper, to the great delight of her friends, so it was a very had one.

Weddings were anciently calebrated under a walnut-bree, because it was, in common with all fruit-bearing trees, sacred to Jupiter, Ex Queen Isabella boasts that she is deeper in debt than any other woman in Europe. That is a condition that only the sex can giory over.

The average spasm of household econ ony consists in not buying what you need because it is dear, and buying what you do not need because it is cheap.

A necessity. Architect: "Now, sir, do you wish any how-windows?" Pater: "Beau-windows? Well, I should say I did. Put in one for every daughter I have got!"

The Greek fringe of hair over the brow has had its day; it disappears at the behest of ladies of fashion; the high and noble forehead will new appeal for fitting admiration.

There is nothing in the world which gives such scope to discontent as idleness, no matter whether forced or voluntary. A man had better be darning stockings than doing nothing.

'On my precioual'' cooed Younghusband, ''If I should be taken away from you, would you ever marry again?'' 'That depends, dear,'' she replied, 'on how young a widow you left me.''

Her idea of nervousness. "I felt so nervous, mamma," said a little girl, referring to an accident of the previous day. "What do you mean by 'nervous,' my dear?" "Why, mamma, it's just being in a hurry all over."

Aunty: "Here is an apple, Johnny. Share it with your sister in a Christian spirit." Johnny: "How am I to do that, aunty?" "Offer her the largest piece." Johnny, handing the apple to his sister: "There, slesy, you share like a Christ-lan."

"How much does young Smifkins earn in the Government service?" saked one of that gentleman's friends of a departmental chief, "I beg your pardon," was the response; "but you mean to say, 'How much does he receive?' do you not?"

The idea that is entertained by some people that violin-playing is bad for the health is not wholly without foundation. Unless care is taken that the instrument is held in a proper position, the chest may be contracted, and a young girl may even become humpbacked.

Ethel: "Was there a donkey on our steps when you came in, Mr. Featherley?" Mr. Featherley: "Why, no, Ethel, What would a donkey be doing there?" Ethel: "I don't know; but Clara said, before you rang the bell, There's that donkey coming here again."

"My dear," whispered a man to his wife, as they seated themselves at the theatra, "I left my pocketbook at home." "Haven't you any money at all?" "Only 40 cents." "Won't that be enough?" "Enough!" he repeated, impatiently.

A good woman is not thoroughly known before marriage. Of how many sweet domestic virtues may not she he possessed, of which even he who values her most highly is maware until he has placed her in his own mansion to be the guardian angel of his household happiness?

Gentleman, to young lady from Rich mond, on the cars—"Beg pardon, but I sm a physician. Your companion is very pale. Is she seriously affected?" Young Lady—"Painfully so, I assure you." "An ansurism, perhaps?" "No: I think his name is Arthur Jones."

A business woman. Jones, to a former sweetheart: "So you are going to throw yourself away on old Jimson?" She—"Throw myself away? I guess you don't know that he has a million and e bad case of heart disease. Call that throwing myself away? That's what I call getting fancy prices."

A gentioman, 75 years of age, recently lost his wife. A venerable lady, a neignbor, nearly four score years, was asked if she had called on her old friend since he had lost his wife. "Why, no, indeed?" she replied in almost indignant surprise. "It would not look well for a widow like me to call on him now, as he is a widows."

De Fickle: "Oh, Laura, wilt thou be mine?" Laura: "Yes, Willie, and I want you to understand one thing. I expected this, and told my brother to post himself behind us in the bushes. I just heard a click, so I know that the fastantaneous shutter on his camera has fallen, and that the some we have just enacted is in his possession. I shall have a dozen pictures of it printed, and if you prove fickle you must look out."

Mrs. Stolid, who is stout and not very tall, has a daughter who is tall and rather slender. Now, if there is anything about which Mrs. Stoffd is sensitive it is her avoirdupots, and when the spirit of mischiel enters her family it is apt to find this sensitive spot before its work is done. The other day this good lady's tall and fragile daughter took occasion to rail at her proportions. "I don't care, Julia," exclaimed her mother: "when you're as big as I am you'll be a good deal bigger!"

An English canon of note used to tell a good stery of himself. In his capacity of magistrate he was once visiting the county goal, and expatiated to a friend who was with him on the virtues of the treadmill. Warming with his theme, he declared that he often wisned he had one at home to give him the genite exercise he required, but was too large to take, except under compulsion; and, to remove his friend's scepticism he asked the warder to give him a turn. Hound went the mill, the canon declaring that the movement was delightful, but after two mismaes of it he had had quite enough, and called on the warder to stop the mill. To his horror the warder maswered, "Very sorvy, sir, I can't; it's timed to go fitten minutes, and won't stop before,"

Masculinities.

A fool always finds a greater fool that Persons often lack courage to appear as Few people reinee to give when it in-

A church fair phonomenon. The longer a man stays the shorter he gets.

Live well to-day and spare your sorrow to him that waite antil to-marrow.

To be cheerfully disposed at the hours of meals is one of the best signs of health.

John: "Elvira, do you love me, or is it my money?" Elvira: John, I love you both."

He who has a good son in law has found a child; he who has a bad one basion a deadhor.

The man with a strong mind who is saked to mind the baby generally doesn't mind it. Wise men change their minds. Fools

The troubles of to day are easily borne.
It is the troubles we auticipate which shorten life.

What a glorious world this would be if people lived up to the epitaphs on their tombetones.

The quickest way to remove frush dark paint is to rub against it with the sleeve or your light

A false friend is like the shadow on the sundiel, appearing in sunchine, but vanishing in

There is considerable dormant genius that ought never to be swallened, if the conferve others is to be taken into consideration.

It might become useful. He: "I love you more than tongue can tell?" Sha, thoughtfully: "Suppose you put it in writing, George."

A pempous man, when he smiles at a jest, takes more credit to bluest for his appreciation of the jobs, than he allows to the wit for uttering it.

Mrs. Partington wants to know, if it were not intended that women should drive their ausbands, why are they put through the bridst ceremen??

The man who pretends that life has no charms for him is seldom the kind of creature that lends any particular rosiness to the existence of others.

Wise father, to married son: "You are living very nicely, I see; but are you saving any money?" Wise son, whispering: "Yes, but don't sell my wife."

Ignorant maiden: "Mr. Marshare must to a model husband. ""Why so?" "He is so etertive to other women you know, he must be a parket stave to his wife."

Good advice. "Hy doctor has forbid den me to take wine, and he says I ought not to smoke, atther." "Then, if I were you, I would den me to take wine, and he says I ought not to smoke, sither." "Then, if I were you, I would change my doctor."

"Jones is a very remarkable man," said

Keene. 'In wint way?' asked highes. 'lie stood at a crossing while a loaded straw wagon want by, and did not pull a single staik.'' Fine seasibilities are like woodbines, delightful luxuries of beauty to twine round a solid upright stem of understanding; but very poor things if they are left to creep along the ground.

An article in an exchange wonders what will become of "The Last Man." Oh, he'eall right! The last woman will get him. She is waiting for him. The first woman, it was noticed, got the first Worth $5,000,000 and only 10 years old. This is the state of affairs with little Marshall Roberts, the son of the late infilionairs Marshall O. Roberts, of New York. He is the youngest millionairs in town.

Society reached: "Then you think that Jack cares for me?" Old Stager: "I'm sure of it. His syms followed your every movement last night," Alarmed. "Gracious! Do you really think he saw all I ate at supper?"

A few conscientious individuals have formed themselves into an "Orange Peel Clab," the members of which bind themselves have to throw the dangerous article in question on the feet-way, nor even to let it remain there, if left by amother,

This is a negro brother's explanation of race colors: "Noah's sone war all baws white, but when man saw his father lyin" drunk he was so mortyfled that he turned black. Stem didn't feel so bad an'only turned yaller, and Japhes hadn't no shame at all."

Jackson: "This picture I have just had taken at Brown's doesn't do mejustice." Johnson: "I see it doesn't; but let me advise you see friend always to putrouse that photographer in future." Jackson is still wondering if his friend meant any more than he said. A beggar, usined Pietro Msrcolini, who for thirty years has been a familiar agure in St. Peter's at Home, has just died suddenly from applicing, as he was leaving the Bastliea. He was the only mendicant who was permitted to follow his calling within the church theelf, Plus IX. having granted bim that privilege.

A projound observer says that the way to judge an individual's temper is to watch the evalida. One with a flery temper will move eyelids with a snap. Another who is easy-going and hard to arouse, moves the cyclide languidly. One with a quick brain and temper, furious when aroused, just bithat steadily, but neither quickly nor slowly until engaged in interesting conversation.

The misiortune which oftentimes follows the inheriting of a fertune is well illustrated by the case of a Frovidence young man. About two years ago he inherited §75, 800, and a despatch says that he proceeded forthwith to equander it, predigal-sen fashion, in duner-giving, Fachling and less innocent ways; that in a single night at New Haven he got rid of §8000; they less fall he was "brotes" and pedding claims through the streets, and that sew days age he committed the crew ning folly of all by stilling himselfs with mer phine at a Frovidence hotel.

Recent Book Issues.

PRIMES PERSODICALA.

Cassell's Fundly Magazine for February opens with an instalment of the serial "To Be Given Up," and this is tollowed by a variety of excellent reading, including "The Mistre-s of the White House," with portraits of Mrs. Harrison and Mrs. Oleveland; "My Old Foe Again"—colds—by the "Faulty Doctor;" "The Universal Advisory Committee;" asuals, short stories, biographical sketches, poetry, etc., together with many good illustrations. Cassell & Co., publishers, New York.

Co., publishers, New York.

The frontispiece of the Magazine of Art for February is an etching by James Dobie, from the famous painting by E. J. Poynter, R. A., called "A Roman Bost Reco." The piece de recistance of the number, from a literary mandpoint, is Mr. Ewinburne's poem, "Losh Torridon," which, with its illustrations, covers four pages of the magazines. Following the poem is a paper on the "Art of Dry Point," by Mortimer Mompes, illustrated by the author. All readers of the "Journal of Marie Bashkirtseff" will be interested in the paper of "Personal Reminiscences of Jules Bastica. Lopage," by the Prince Bojidar Karageorgevitch, There are two portraits of Bastica-Lopage by himself, and one from Rodin's status secompanying this very interesting article. There is a full page reproduction of Bir Thomas Lawrence's picture of the Countess Gower and her daughter, an illustrated paper on the Corporation Galisey of Glisagow, an article on Arisist in the New National Portrait Galporation Gallery of Glasgow, an article on Artists in the New National Portrait Gal-lery, a paper on "Old Blue and White Mankson China," with illustrations printed in blue ink, and an unusually full batch of foreign and American notes, giving the reader an admirable idea of what is going on in the world of art. Cassell & Con

The complete novel in the February The complete novel in the February number of Lippinecti's Magazine is estitited "The sign of the Four, or, The Problem of the Shoitos," by an English author, A. Conan Doyle, whose "Missh Clark" greated a sensition in England. "The Sign of the Four" is an admirable and ingenious detective story. The second part of Nathaniel Hawthorne's "Elizir of Life." edited by his son. Julian Hawpart of Nathaniel Hawthorne's "Elizir of Life," edited by his son, Julian Haw-thorne, is given. Francis Galton, F. R. S., the celebrated English eclentist and au-thor, contributes an interesting article en-titled "Why Do We Measure Mankind?" "The Salon idea in New York," is the "The Salon idea in New York," is the title of a paper by C. H. Crandell. C. H. Herford has a pleasing article Shelley's Welan Haunta." "The Blue-and-Gold Man-Child" is a striking story by M. H. Cetherwood, the author of "The Romance of Dollard." Other articles are "A Plea for Press Censorship," by A. F. Watrous; "Married Genuises," by John Habberton; "The Forestry Problem," by Oharles Morris; "The Dissipation of Reading," by Chas. Molivaine; "Traduttore Traditore," and several poems. The department of "Book-Taik" is bright and interesting; and a new department, "New Books," gives concise and critical notice of noteworthy publications. orthy public LIVELY PRODUCTION.—According to maturatists, a acception will produce 65 young, a common fly will iny 144 eggs, a leech 150 and a spider 170 A hydrachna produces 600 eggs and a troy 1,100 A female moth will produce 1 100 eggs and a tortoise 1,000. A gail isseet has laid 50,000 eggs, a shrimp 6,000 and 10 000 have been found in the overy of an averis. One naturalist found more than 12,000 eggs in a lobeter and another more than 21,000. An insect very similar to an ant (Mutilla) has produced 80 000 eggs in a single day, and Leuwenhoeck seems to compute 4 000,000 as the orab's share. Many fishes produce; an incredible number of eggs. More than 36 000 have been counted in a herring, 36 000 in a smelt, 1 000 000 in a streech, 8 000 000 in a tench, 5 46 000 in a mackers, 802,000 in a parch and 1,347 000 in a flounder. But of all the fishes nitherto discovered, the cod is most prolific. One naturalist computes that this fish produces more than 3,686,000 eggs and another as many as 9,444,000. as many as 9,444,000.

GOVEREMENT CATE.—The cat is the useful servant of man and not only of man, but of governments. Case are rated on the books of our public offices, dook yards, stores and shipping. Eight cats are on the staff of the Midland Raliway at Trent, in Eugiand, and they earn their board by guarding some hundreds of thousands of corn makes against the rais. A like service in regard to the letter bags is preformed by hundreds of cats in the employ of the Post Office of the United States. When a kitten is born to one of these public servants, the local postsmater notifies the district super-intendents and obtains additional rations. It is not stated whether the cate go out of office along with the pestmasters at the end of the Presidential term. It takes all the time of one man to look after the eats in government pay in the State printing office in France. GOVERNMENT CATS .- The cat is the use-

Among the "hundred best books" the postetbook ranks first. If it is sufficiently robust there will be no difficulty in selecting the other ninety nine.

When troubled with a cough or cold use Dr. Suli's Cough Syrup. Price 25 cents. Salvation Oil will do rhoumation more good then any high priced limiments. 25 etc. THE SULTAR'S CAPITAL.

ONSTANTINOPLE is the brightest oity by day and the darkest by night. Soon after nightfall the streets are de seried, and except an occasional rattling of a carriage over the stony streets, not a sound is heard but the stick of the watchmen etriking the bour, and the dismal howling of innumerable dogs as they engage in their nightly battles.

The people keep early hours at night and ate hours in the morning. At nine o'clock the city is just beginning to wake from its slumber. Constantinople is not a great city, like Paris and New York, but a collec tion of a hundred villages, each with its distinct name, and some of them with entirely different manners, customers, and Perr, for instance, is inhabited almost exclusively by Europeans-French, English, Jtalians, and Germans. Here the lan guage of society is French. Stamboul, on the opposite side of the Bosphorus, is the Turkish quarters. In five minutes, by prossing the bridge of the Suita Vorede (queen mother), you pass from the civilisation of the West to the semi-barbarism of

One hundred thousand people pass that bridge every day; and the tolls which is paid by them-forming a large item in course of a year—go to the Admiralty, to wards the support of the Navy.

The Turks are great esters; a dinner of twenty courses is common. When they are not eating, they are smoking; when they are neither eating nor smoking, they are sleeping. Coffee is the universal drink of the East among all people. It is ground fresh every time, and the milk and sugar are boiled with the coffee. It is served in tiny china cups of quaint shape and work-

The people are miserably poor. Beggars infeet the streets by day and thieves by night; and as the city is only lighted in the European quarter-and very poorly there every opportunity is afforded the robbers to ply their vocation with success and impunity.

The salary of the police is nominally fairly good, but, as they are seldom paid, they ske out a precarious living by taking bribes from criminals and letting them go.

The pay of the solder is about tenpence day, but their pay is always in arrears. A portion of their duty is to arrest tobacco smuggiers. They seize the contraband goods, release the offenders, sell the toeco, and pocket the proceeds.

The bassars of Constantinopie are full of et, and give the visitor a better idea of oriental life than anything else in the elty. As you approach the region of East ern traffic, you are smalled in many different languages—such as Greek, Armenian, Hebrew, Arabian, and Nubian.

Let us enter the bassar of stuffs. What a rich and dessiting display of goods! Oarpets from Persia, shawis from India, silks from Broussa, brocades from Bagdad, scarfs of bine and gold so transparent and light that they have been compared to sunsut clouds, table covers embroidered with araseeque, golden veils woven with silver thread, ropes of crimson velvet bordered with and sprinkled all over with golden stars; mantles of green, ermine, orange, and purple; bridal veils sparkling with silver spangles; and the satin girdle worn by a Turkish lady, on which the eyes of no man except the husband ever fall.

The bassar of perfumery next invites your attention. Here are to be found those famous perfum s with which the poetry of the East has made us familiar-the most precious attar of roses shut up in velvet es, and so costly that none but the rich can buy it. Here are also the seraglio pastiles for perfuming kisses, and kohl for coloring the eyebrews, henna for the finger tips, scape that make the skin as soft as silk, essence from sandal wood and myrrh, pomades for the hair, aloes to sweeten pipes, bags of musk, and a thousand other powders and fragrant waters that call up visions of fair women breathing an atmosphere of love and sighs.

But it is in the jeweller's bassar that one's ideas of oriental magnificence are realised, and Aladdin's wonderful lamp has conjured up a vision of unparalleled beauty, so dasting that we rub our eyes and wonder whether they can be real. There is a Bra-sitian topas that would have delighted Mms. Bonaparte; a diamond from Guiconda, worthy to adorn the neck of an Empress; a turquoise from Macedonia, that might have fallen from the scimitar of a Sultan; here are plies of necklaces of opal and pearl, rebies of priceless value, and geme of every kind known to the lapidary.

To refresh the eyes let us enter the p pe bassar. Dear to the soil of the Turk in tobeeco, "the fourth column of the emopy of voluptuousness," and every sort of smosing article is provided for the indulgance of this favorite luxury; chibouks, with stems of cherry and rosewood, amber mouth pieces, polished as crystal and set with diamonds; narghiles of silver of quaint and curious shapes, sprinkled with gems, and their tubes glittering with golden rings.

When Byron, who vented his poetical disgust at Maita, with its "streets of stairs," visited Constantinopie, he uttered no curses "loud and deep," at the streets of stairs that abound in the city of the Sultan, which are descended at the risk one's nesk, and ascended in danger of bringing on heart disease. Not only are the streets deep and stony, but slippery with mud, and some of them reeking with fith. The Turks are the most stupid a d conservative people in the world; they make no changes; as their fathers lived, so live they; and ti us what was good enough for their ancesters is good enough still, and is ever likely to

WHERE COLORS COME FROM -The useful pigment called Indian ink is manufactured by the Chinese from burnt camphor. Thus you see the impression of Oniness letters upon every piece, and they preserve the secret of making it; so you could not produce it yourself, nor can we enlighten you upon it. Sepis, which some what resembles, and often supplies a good substitute for it, is produced from the outtie-fish, and is the dark fluid discharged by him to render the water opeque when attacked. We see no chance of your being able to make your own colors. The camel is the source of Indian yellow; the coentneal insect of purple take, carmine, and scarlet carmine. Persian blue is com pounded from refuse animal matter, a fusion of horses' hoofs, and impure potassium carbonate. Some of the lakes are derived from gums, barks, and roots of trees. From the madder plant, growing in Hindostan, the fine Turkey red is produced. and from the yellow sap of a tree in Blam we get gamboge, which is caught by the natives in cocoanus shells. Other colors are made from earth, such as raw sienns from the locality of that name, and burnt umber is only earth near Umber which is burnt to produce the pigment. Lamp black is made of the soot of certain various resinous substances, blue black from the charcoal of the vine stalk, and bistre is likewise the soot of wood ashes. Ivory chips produce ivory black and bone black; mastic is from the gum of the mastic tree, which is a native of the Grecian Archipelago. The beautiful and expensive paint called ultramarine is derived from lapis-lasuli, Chinese white from sine, vermillion from cinnabar (quicksilver ore), and scarlet lodide of mercury.

IT was a good point made in the discussion of corporal punishment, at the large meeting of primary teachers, lately, by the sensible young woman who said that if half the present number of children were scated in a schoolroom, and better ventilation secured, the necessity for punishment would be almost done away with. Fresh air and elbow room make good morals with children in the primary schools, as well as with those of larger growth.

"WHAT is your ides of a gentleman, Yellowly?" "A true gentleman always laughs at the joke of a story and never says that he heard it before."

IT FETCHES OFE UP VERY SHORT, to be se zed with Pieurisy. Pneumonia, o acute Throat or Lung Affection. Jayne's Expectorant proves a handy help in such attacks, and is besides a good oldfashioned remedy for all Coughs and Colds,

2,100 DOZEN FREE 2,100 Dosen pairs Ladies in Fall and Winter Hoslery given absolutely free to introduce the Household Companion. They are heavy, warm, well made, fashienable, solid colors, stripes, checks, all the popular shadescardinal, navy blue, saladescardinal, navy blue, seal brewn, black, slate tan, in fact style and colors to suit all tastes. Don't pay 25 te 75 ets, for pair of Fall and Winter Lose when you can get a dozen to nothing. The old reliable Hose when you can get a dozen to nothing. The old reliable Hose when you can get a dozen to nothing. The old reliable Hose when you can get a dozen to nothing. The old reliable Hose when you can get a dozen te nothing. The old reliable Hose when you can get a dozen te median dozen and short stories, romances, sketches, wit, humor, fashion, household hints, stories for children, &c., & ranks among the Erse Metropolitan Journals. Peaktively the soutire lot (2,100 doz.) be given away during the next 40 days. We also send the Household Companion & sanath & free to 2,100 persons who will answer this adversariable heald Companion & sanath she headdress of Pinewpaper readers from different families. So thoselubraiser, or the list of 190 pubsershers we send I descen pairs of these beautiful and useful articles. We are determined to lead the race in premiums, hence and offerent families.

packing &c. and

R. RADWAY'S READY RELIEF.

Family Use in the World.

In from one to twenty minutes never falls to relieve PAIN with one thorough application. No matter how violent or excreding the pain, the RHEU-MATIC, SEDRIDDEN, INFIRM, CRIFFICE, NERVOUS, NEURALGIC, or prostrated with discase may senfer, RADWAY'S READY RELIEF will afford instant case.

Sore Throat, Colds, Coughs, Inflammation, Sciatica, Lumbago, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Headache, Toothache, Influenza, Difficult Breathing CURED AND PREVENTED BY

RADWAY'S READY RKLIKY

In cases of LUMBAGO and RHEUMATISM, RAD-WAY'S READY RELIEF NEVER FAILS to give

Worth its Weight in Gold!"

Jan. 14, '88,

Dis. Radway. I have tried all the various kinds of remedies that they have on the market without effect, when finally I grew worse, and a friend advised me to try your Ready Relief. I did so, applying to my ankle and knee, and to my surprise was able to resume my duties next morning. My trouble was Rheumatism of long standing. I shall never be without E. R. E. for its weight in gold, My mother was cured by E. R. R. in two hours of rheumatism in her shoulder.

W. H. COOPER of COOPER & EVANS,

THE ONLY PAIN REMEDY

That instantly stops the most exeruciating pains, allays Inflammation and curse Congestion, whether of the Lungs, Stomach, Bowels, or other glands or orans, by one application.

IN TERMALLY, a half to a teaspeoutful in half a tumbler of water will in a few minutes care Crampa, Spasma, Sour Stomach, Nausea, Vomiting, Heartburn, Nervousness, Sleeplesness, Sick Headach, Diarrhose, Colle, Flatulency and all internal pains.

MALARIA IN ALL ITS FORMS,

FEVER AND AGUE,

Radway's Ready Relief

Not only cures the patient seized with malaria, but if people exposed to it in chill and lever districts will every morning on getting out of hed take twenty or thirty drops of the READY RELIEF in a glass of water and drink it, and eat, may a cracker, they will escape attacks.

a giass of water and drink it, and est, say a cracker, they will escape attacks.

There is not a remedial agent in the world that will cure fever and ague and all other maisrious, billous and other fevers, aided by RADWAY'S PLLES, oquickly as RAIWAY'S BEADY RELIEF.

Fifty Cents per bottle Sold by druggists.

RADWAY'S PILLS,

The Great Liver Remedy.

Perfectly tasteless, elegantly coated with sweet gars, purge, regulate, purify, cleanse and strengthen. DR. RADWAY'S PILLS for the cure of all disorders of the stomach, liver, bowels, kidneys, bladder, nervous diseases, loss of appetite, headache, costiveness, indigestion, dyspepsis, bilionsness, faver, inflammation of the bowels, piles, and all derangements of the internal viscers. Furely vegetable, containing no mercury, minerals, or, deleterious drugs.

PERFECT DIGESTION

Will be accomplished by taking Radway's Pills. By so doing

SICK HEADACHE

Dyspensia, Foul Stomach, Billousness, will be avoided, and the food that is eaten contribute its nourishing properties for the support of the natural waste of the body.

42 Observe the following symptoms resulting from diseases of the digestive organs: Constipation, inward piles, fulness of blood in the head, acidity of the stomach, nauses, heartburn, disgust of food, fulness of weight in the stomach, sour cructations sinking or futtering of the heart, choking or sufficiently sensations when in a lying posture, dimness of vision, dots or webs before the sight, fever and dull pain in the head, deficiency of perspiration, yellowness of the skin and eyes, pain in the side, cheet, limba, and sadden finshes of heat, burning in the fiesh.

SAVE MONEY.

Dear Sir—I would not be without your Pills and your Ready Relief. They save me many a doctor's bill. MRS. M. GIFFOBD.

A few doses of RADWAY'S PILLS will free the system of all the above-named disorders.

DYSPEPSIA.

DR. RADWAY'S PILLS are a cure for this com-plaint. They restore strength to the stemach, and easile it to perform its function. The symptoms of Dyspepsia disappear, and with them the liability of the system to contract diseases.

Price, 85 comis per box. Sold by all draggists.
DR. EADWAY & OU., No. 28 Warren street, New York,

TO THE PUBLIC.

We sure and ask for EADWAY'S, and see that the name of "EADWAY" is on what you buy.

Humorous.

THE COOKING SCHOOL.

"Where are you going to, my pretty maid?"
"I'm going to cooking-school, sir," she said.

"And what do you do there, my pretty maid?"
"Make waffies and biscuits, kind sir," she said.

"And then do you eat them, my pretty maid?"
"I do not care to die yet, sir, " she said. -U. N. NONB.

Brothers in law: The judges.

The most pompous soldier ever known

Why is the letter t like your noset-Because it goes before you (u).

New publication-Unpoetical "Lines on a Lady's Pace, "-Crow's-feet

The young lady who took the gentleman's fancy has returned it with thanks, To dream you are a pig. behoves you to guard well your tongue, lest you turn out a t

The road to success is open to all, but too many want to get there without the trouble of

He: "How timid and shy the bride ap pears " She: "Naturally; this is her fourth hus-

"I am learning see language varey fast. Zee leetle poy zere a spinning his top. He's a spin-"When I drink much I can't work, and so I let it alone." "The drinking?" "No, the working." Fussy old gentleman: "There's a fly on your nose, ma'am." Irascible old lady: "Well, he

Jones: "I've come to you, Robinson, after a little advice." Robinson: "Well, here's some: Neverask for any." She, at the piano: "Listen! How do you enjoy this refrain?" He. "Very much. The more you refrain, the better I like it." "What is sweeter than to have a friend you can trust?" asked Sawkins. "To have a friend who will trust you, " replied Dawkins. Ethel, who is glueing on her doll's wig: 'Letty, do you know why grandpa's hair has gone off his head? It wasn't stuck well.'' Simeral: 'That adage, 'Marry in haste and repent at leisure, 'is all bosh." Maddox: "Why?" Simeral: "Because married men have no

A man who had been told that he was about to die, asked the doctor for his bill, saying that he did not wish to depart from his life-long rule, "Pay as you go."

It is a little rough on the criminal. They get the weakest-minded, most ignorant men possible for the jury, and then talk of trying the poor unfortunate by a jury of his peers!

Harry: "And, dearest, do you think of me all the day long?" Dearest. "I did, Harry; but the days are getting longer now, and of course—well, you know that must make some difference."

'Oh. my precious!" cooed Younghusband, "if I should be taken away from you, would you ever marry again?" "That depends, dear," she replied, "on how young a widow you left me," Judge: "Have you ever been punished before?" Prisoner: "Well, at all events, not in the last is years." "Are you sure of that?" "Car-tain, sure. I've just served out a 10 years' sen-

Mamma: "Bobby, I noticed that your little sister took the smaller apple. Did you let her have her choice, as I told you to?" Bobby: "Yes, I told her she could have the little one or none, and she chose the little one."

A woman who recently had her butter seized by the cierk of the market for short weight, gave as a reason that the cow from which the butter

A lady lawyer in Chicago telegraphed a patron: "Do you wish to retain me?" He telegraphed back. "Your fees are too large," But the man who copied the mes age got it "f. of "fees," and a libel suit is pending.

Dejected Youth: "I would like to return this engagement ring I purchased here a few days ago," Jeweller: "Didn't it suit the young indy?"
D. Y.: "Yes, but another young man had already given her one just like it and I would like to exchange Collector: "I'd like to know when you are going to pay this bill? I can't be running here every day in the week." Debtor: What day would suit you best?" Collector: "Well, I could come again on Saturday." Debtor: "All right, from now on you can call every Saturday."

Magistrate: "Murphy, you are drunk again!" Murphy: "Yesh, your-roner." Magis-trate: "Didn't you promise me solemnly, when I let you off last time, that you would never get drunk again?" Murphy: "Tesh, your-renor; but I wush drunk at the time. I wushn't 'sponsible for what I

"What's the trouble with you?" asked the doctor. "Lasomnia," replied the patient. "Can't sleep, eh?" "Not four hours a night." "Ever tried anything?" "Tried everything: all no good." "Ever try anything to keep awake?" Pa-tient sees hope for himself in an experiment that never was known to fail.

Servant: "Mr Kollect is at the door with a bill." Neverpay: "Tell him I'm out," Servant: "Yes, sir." Neverpay: "But, James—" Servant: "Yes, sir?" Neverpay: "Speak to him hindly, James; he deserves consideration; he calls only once a formight, while the others call every week." Bervant: "Yes, sir."

How to KEEP WARM,-It may not be generally known that when exposed to severe cold a feeling of warmth is readily erested by repeatedly filling the lungs to their utmost extent in the following manner: Throw the shoulders well back and hold the head well up. Infiate the lungs alowly, the air entering entirely through the nose. When the lungs are completely filled, held the breath for ten seconds or longer, and then expire it quickly through the mouth. After repeating the exercise while one is chilly, a feeling of warmth will be felt over the entire body, and even in the feet and hands. It is important to practise the exercise many times each day, and especially when in the open oir. If the babit ever becomes universal, then consumption and many other diseases will rarely, if ever be heard of. Not only while practising the breathing exercise must the ciothing be loose over the chest, but beginners will do well to remember in having their clothing fitted to allow for the permanent expansion of one, two or even three inches which will follow.

AT a recent temperance meeting in Scotland, a convert got up to speak: "My friends," said he, "three months ago is signed the pledge. (Cheers.) In a month afterward, my friends, I had a sovereign in my pocket, a toing I never had before. (Loud cheers,) And in another month, my friends, I had a good coat on my back, a thing I never had before. (Cheers much louder.) A fortnight after that, my friends, I bought a coffin, because I felt pretty certain that if I kept the piedge another fortnight I should want one." (No cheers.)

One person in each leverality can earn a good sized has of goolel at work for on turing the sext few months. Some earn 1880 a day and spwards, and all get grand wages. No some can full who for lower our directions All thesew, plan lowe our directions All thesew, plans

Seeds epkts of my choicest Flower Seeds 10c. Beautiful catalog free. F. B. Mills, Thorn Hill, N. Y.

Patrita THOMAS P. SIMPSON, Washington, D. C. No atty's fee until Patent obtained. Write for Inventor's Guide.

DOLLARD & CO.,

1223 CHESTNUT ST., Philadelphia. Premier Artists IN HAIR.

Inventors of the celebrated COSSAMER VEE TILATING WIG and ELASTIC BAND

POUPMENS.

Instructions to enable Ladies and Gentlemen to measure their own heads with accuracy:
FOR WIGG, INCHIS.
No. 1. The round of the head.
No. 2. From ear to ear over the head to neck.
No. 3. From ear to ear over the top.
No. 6. From ear to ear round the forehead they have always ready for sale a splendid Stock of Gents' Wiga, Toupees, Lances' Wiga, Half Wigs, Frisettes, Braids, Ouris, etc., beaufully manufactured, and as cheap as any establishment in the Union. Letters from any part of the world will receive attention.

Dellard's Herbanium Extract for the Hair.

This preparation has been manufactured and sold at Dollard's for the past fifty years, and its merits are such that, while it has never yet been advertised, at Dollard's for the past anty years, and its merisare such that, while it has never yet been advertised, the demand for it keeps steadily increasing.

Also Dealisard's Eagenersative Creasum, to be used in conjunction with the Herbanium when the Hair is naturally dry and needs an oil.

Mrs. Edmondson Gorter writes to Messrs Dollard & Co., to seem her a bottle of their Herbanium Extract for the Hair. Mrs. Gorter has tried in vain to obtain anything equal to it as a dressing for the hair in England.

MES. EDMONDSON GORTER,
Oak Lodge Thorpe.

Nov. 28, '88. Norwich, Norfolk, England.

NAVY PAY OFFICE, PHILADELPHIA.

I have need "Dollard's Herbanium Extract, or Vegetable Hair Wash," regularly for upwards of ave years with great advantage. My hair, from rapidly thinning, was early restored, and has been kept by it in its wonted thickness and strength. Its the best Wash I have ever used.

TO MRS. RICHARD DOLLARD, 1228 Chestant st., Phila.

Is the best wash I have ever use.

A. W. RUSSELL, U. S. N.

TO MES. RICKARD DOLLARD, 122 Chestnut st., Phils.
I have frequently, during a number of years, used the "Dollard's Herbanium Extract," and I do not know of any which equasis is as a pleasant, refreshing and healthful cleanser of the hair.

Ex-Member of Congress, 5th District.
I have used constantly for more than twenty-five years, "Dollard's Herbanium," for removing dandruff and dressing my hair, also for the relief of nervous headaches. I have found it a delightful article for the totlet, and cheerfully testify to the virtues claimed for it. I would not be like the it.

JAMES B. CHANDLER,

No. 386 Chestnut Street.

Prepared only and for sale, wholesale and retail.

Prepared only and for sale, wholesale and retail, and applied professionally by

DOLLARD & CO.

9 ENTLEMEN'S HAIR CUTTING AND SHAVING. LADIES' AND CHILDREN'S HAIR CUTTING. None but Practical Male and Female Artists EmA NEW TREATMENT.

earch, however, has proved this to be a het, and the result of this discovery is hat a simple remedy has been discovered thich portugated. fow simple application of) by the patient at home. A principle explaining this new treatment is sent by A. H. Dixon & Son, Sy and 200 at King Street, Toronto, Canada.

PLAYS Dialogues, Tableaux, Speakers, for School/Diab & Parior, Bostout, Catalogues, Tableaux, Speakers, for School, Chicago, Ill.

BADGES For Social, Literary and Beneficial

All kinds of Clubs, Schools, Academies, &c. We make GOLD FIND and CHARMS, MEDALS, do., from all adapted, or special designs, as very resconsible prices. We also make a specialty of SOCIETIES.

RIBBON BADGES

H.G. OESTERLE & CO. No. 224 N. Ninth St., Philodolphia, Pa.

on 19 803 frings mode, 1 Michel philod Fee and Smitter Stamp and this Solied Gold ring 12 de., 41. bill.CLXNTON BEGS, Climtonville, Ot.

ESMEN WANTED A COMOR TO

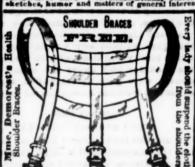

A MARVELOUS OFFER By A Reliable House!

Every lady has heard of MME. DENOMENT. Hes ame is a by word in every house in the land. Hes isbrated Patterns have been in nes over 45 years, e are the publish rs of the well-known publication. Mms. Demorest's litustrated Monthly Fashion Journal

Demorast Colob'd Cornets
Shoulder Braces
Stocking Supporters

The MME, DEMOREST SILLUSTRATED MONTHLY PARTITION TOTALS. In a 56 pure paper, be autifully flustrated, covering every possible flustrated, covering every possible flustrated, covering, etc., each department being under the special supervision of the best knews cantributers. It is basicles replete with matters of interest to methers, and is furthermore filled with illustrations, excless sketches, humor and matters of general interest, FREE!

HOW TO OBTAIN FREE

How To Obtain A PAIR OF SHOULDER BRACES FREE Hend us 50 Cents for one year's subscription to our JOURNAL, and 35 Cents additional to pay postsy and packing 75 Cents in all, and we will unail you tiese two articles, the Pair of A 100 CLEFE BER ACES and One Pair of NTOCKING SUPPORTERS JUNE 38 38 38 38 REMEMBER THERE IS NO HUMBUR ABOUT THESE OFFERS.

We do exactly as we guarantee. Our house has been established for over 40 years, and earn refer you to any Commercial Agency, Bank, Express Office or Business Firm in the and. Make all renationous either by Draft, Fostal Hote, Money Order, or Engineers Letter. THE DEMOREST FASHION & SEWING MACHINE CO.,

ITEAST 14th STREET, NEW YORK.

REGISTRO
SUPPORTERS

This offer should be taken advantage of at once as we will give away no more than 200,000 of each article. SHOW THIS TO YOUR FRIENDS. IT WILL NOT APPEAR AGAIN. We know the Bemorest Fashies and Sowing Machine Co. to be a thoroughly peliable firm of advise our renders to accept their offer.—EDITOR.

A STEM-WINDING FREE SO DAYS FREE

1800 These beautiful is k gold Plated watches to be given absolutely FRE to line persons who will read this advertisement and help introduce new anisoribers to the MOUREMOLD CREATANON—Offer No. 1: The HOUREMOLD CREATANON—Offer No. 1: The HOUREMOLD CREATANON—Offer No. 1: The HOUREMOLD COMPANION will be sent six months acceptance of the mountain and send us the address of B newspaper readers, representing different families. Premiums sent same day misseriptions are received. The old reisable and popular Illustrated HOURSHOLD COMPANION of New York, is a complete family paper in its fullessens; each issue profusely and beautifully illustrated, containing several complete and serial stories of facinating interest, and a rich variety of funnty sketches, amendodes, news, condensed notes maintain according to the first transfer of the promise of the centrity. Remember we gained and meintain our innecesse implicitly and circulation by giving only value hie and useful promise few York paper to disappoint its patrons if you want one of the above premiums, and will promise to ansate sound 15 centage its promiser few York paper to disappoint its patrons if you want one of the above premiums, and will promise to ansate sound 15 centage its control of the pay postage, packing &c., and you will yet you want one of the above premiums, and will promise to ansate sound 15 centage its end paper one year and a NoLIB Gol. B Hunding Case Storn Winding Keen Sesting Watch, with Lever in Revenue at Link Winding Keen Storn with the facility with the centage for the servers on the section of the center of the servers on their facing of the center of the servers on the servers on the servers of the servers on the servers of the servers on the servers on the servers of the servers of the servers on the servers of the servers of the servers on the servers of the se Spingt Paristyn Phasen.

Mantles are particularly handsome this m. The most fashionable shapes fol-imple, siegast lines, the massials are more than usually rich, and the hard-embroidered silk organication worked on the material surpasses in beauty and oneded H

Black velvet plush, with a straight pile like velvet, but much thicker and deeper, is a favorite material for redisguess and for smaller menties in various shapes, orna-mented with black slik embroidery in raised passementerie-like patterne, and bordered with rich chenille fringe or with ostrick feather trimming. Both dipped and curied cetrich leather trimmings, in black and colors, are much used this autumn, and are often preferred to fur. which will, however, be very much wern little later in the season.

A remarkably handsome model to redingute of black velvet plush, fitting the figure accurately, and richly ornamented with black silk and cord embroidery. The long wing-sleeves are of magnificent black proceds, and are mounted with pleats under short steeves of the plush; these are d, and very much raised at the shoulders, being padded to keep them in e, and ornamented, like the redingote, with embroidery. The lining is of dabliscolored surah in a lovely pale shade. Another style of redingote has the nausi long pensis in front, beautifully embroi-dered at the edge, but a short pleated besque only at the back; this has the long, loose wing sleeves of plush, and is trimmed with fur, as well as ornamented with embreidery. This stylish model is also carried out in colors and in vigogne. In this material, in red or in green, with black omenterie trimmings, it is a very useful vetement, and may be had with the short basque described, or with the ordinary pleated skirt.

Succe are still made with very pointed so sharp that they are known as seedle pointed. The toes are always padded, and, if the shoes are chosen w plenty of breadth at the wide part of the oot, they are very comfortable and becom ing, and make the feet look small.

A recode Surah for day wear has been seftly arranged with some guipure in Oriental coloring, worked in points, which appeared at the waist and on the front of be skirt. At the watet was a sash tunie tarning upwards at half the depth, and fined with velvst of the same shade.

This was used also for ouffy and for the pointed waistband; but the great noveity in the arrangement of this bodies was cles of source jacket coming from the species of source passes, and tying in a loose knot in the centra, where it was ned with a brooch like the one at the threat.

For wearing with this was a small toque, having a fulled brim of velvet matching that on the skirt, the top entirely hidden by honeyenskie, blowaways, and forget-menote, which carried out the tinte in the pointed isce-like embroidery. Tals dress had high, upstanding sleeves.

nehade was of the same tone as the dress, and had a new ivory handle striped gold and white, with a gold and white top and the shoes were of Russian yellow kid. with a small buckle on the instep; the stockings were of the same tint also Another day dress was a good, useful shade of brown cashmers, draped over faille, with a panel of Indian embroidery on the skirt and waistcoat to match; this was fastened with buttons, which, on a brown foundation, seemed to reflect all the tints in the embroidery. The charming bronse shoes matched this costume exactly.

A black velvet dress had two bodiess; the skirt was out on a new principle, with elongated tabs of velvet, which left the jetted net clearly visible; but this also was quite savel, being covered with closely worked resettes of jet in stripes.

The morning bodies had revers of white satin, with stripes of jet carried across the front. The evening one had a high Medici collar and pretty soft scarves of jetted net.

The hat for wearing with this was particularly new and stylish; a white felt with fiat crown, tordered all round with a white ostrich feather ruche, a tuft of ostrich feathere standing up at the back, and rising from a bow resting on the bair. The effect of this pure white hat with the black gown was admirable.

A fine Indian shawl sent over for the purpose had been converted into an opera mentie, and treated with consummate skill. Large points of mouses-colored velvet had been introduced in the back, radiating from the collar, and the sleeves, which feil some vetvet size. It was bordered with a chenille fringe of the mouse color.

A crease Chinese creps shawl, richly embroides ed, had also been converted into an epers mentio, the embroidery and the fringe showing to the best sovaniage. This Stied at the back, and in front form double drapery most becoming to the Bilk is mostly worn in the evening only, and handsome brosades have been specially brought out.

See skin teckets are likely to be much worn. They are dyed of a darker shade than they used to be, and the skin is now so carefully shaved and thinned that the skin is no longer bareb, and can be better edopted to the figure.

The jackets are somewhat longer; they always are when dress improvers are out of fashion. They have high stand-up collare and high sleeves. Nothing is more carviosable or america if well out.

Princess dresses or redingotes are over straight, separate skirts, but of extremely rich material and trimming with dressy aques for the theatre, and bandsome mantice with fur trimming. I saw two patiern dresses for day wear; one was in fine cloth, the color palissandre, of a reddish shade, and on the bodice wide revers forming a sort of pelerine; the other was vieux-rose cloth with narrow bisek stripes: an embroidered black guipure ascended in points at intervals round the skirt; the revers on the bodice were to match, and the top of the bodice was black silk, with guipure embroidery.

These costumes appear simple, and in reality the ornamentation is much more costly than it looks.

Visiting dresses are made short, in black or colored silk, with scarf sashes. One I saw was beaver-colored peau de sole, with faye stripes; a thick black lace ruche encircled the edge of the skirt, and a cestor velvet scarf served as sash; the bodice was peau de sole, with velvet sleeves; puffed at the top, and close fitting at the lower part of the arm; a Figaro jacket was simulated with black passementerie and grelote.

A casaque to wear at the theatre, with different colored skirts, was made of phosphore velvet, with cloimones embroidery round (this resembles open trellis work or small gold nati-heads); it opened over a mass of pleated silk gause, the color called "rose ibis;" sleeves flat at the lower part of arm, and gradually widening towards the top, slashed with pink gause.

A pretty woollen dress was gray with s stripe of feu, which is a sort of reddish dead leaf shade; these stripss were arranged in a sianting direction instead of straight, and the bodies, made on the cross also, quite plain and high, appeared to be moulded on the figure without any visible fastening, but in reality was attached with hooks on the shoulder and under the arm. The eves were gray velvet, puffed, and the collar and waistband embroidered in steel.

Odds and End

ABOUT SPANISH COOKERY.

It must be born in mind that oil enters into the composition of a large number of Spanish dishes. Travel and education have done much to overcome the almost universal common prejudice against its use, and, in Spanish cookery, to substitute lard or butter would be to destroy one of its ohief characteristics.

All offensive flavor and smell can be entirely got rid of by throwing into the oil. when hot, a small piece of bread, which must remain until-not brown-but black.

For trying fish the oil is then at its proper temperature; but for many other disnesfor instance, where onion has to be friedthe oil should be allowed to cool a little, so as to fry the onions tender, but not brown. Again, where garlic is specified, the entire flavor of the dish is altered if this is left out, and in all the receipts given in this paper the smallest quantity is named.

Red Papper (Pimienta Molida).-Such a common ingredient of Spanish dishes which, contrary to its name, is neither hot nor pungent, is the captionm dried and ground. The green peppers, which are capsionine in a green state, are now to be had of most superipr green grocers; they have a peculiar flavor, slightly bitter, but very agreeable when once the taste is soquired. They vary in shape and sizefor winter nee they should be hung on a string in a warm, dry room, and they will turn red. They are useful for flavoring stews, etc., but require to be bruised in a mortar. Red pepper is best bought in small quantities, and must be kept air-tight in a warm dry emphoard, as it is apt to get musty and mouldy otherwise.

Borsa (promounced ver-air) is the general name for all vegetables, but is applied in in a square form, had a double point of the applied in particular to the national dish-the oils-which is esten daily in nearly every Spanish home, for which several s will be given, as it is varied according to the sesson. The berse is a dinner in itself, comprising meat, pork sausage, and vegetables, and it is for a change a most wholesome and delicious meal for people in health, though not perhaps well suited to bilious people or invalids.

it ought to be cooked at least six hours-Solied pretty quickly without stopping (in Spain a round earthenware pot is used over a charcoal fire). If an iron pot is used, it should be enamelled, and care taken not to burn the contents.

Potage -According to the quantity required, take baricot beans (if old ones, previously soaked), and put to them about plat of cold water, and a tables poonful or two of sweet saind oil-and a whole head of garlie. Boti gently until nearly tender, and then add a large teaspoonful of red pepper, sufficient sait, and a tomato broken. Add more water if required, and continue to boil until the beans are perfectly tender, but not broken. This dish ought not to be too sloppy, but still moist. Lentils cooked in exactly the same way, but with the addition of a clove or two pounded in a mortar, are very delicious. The tomato can be omitted without much injury to the flavor; the garlie ought to be removed before serv-

Rice with Tomatoes .- Fry in a half teacuptul of oil-which may previously be purified by frying in it a small bit of bread one or two green peppers whole. When done, take them out and remove the thin outer skin, and place them on one side. Out up one or two green peppers and fry them, and a small onion cut up. When the onion is tender, but not brown, put in five or six tomatoes, skinned and broken. Let these fry until quite pulpy, stirring frequently, that they may not burn nor stick to the pan, then throw in a breakfast cupful of rice, stir it well in, and then add plenty of hot water and sufficient sait, and let it boll gently, until the rice is nicely done and the water all absorbed, taking care to stir frequently, that it may neither stick nor burn. Serve with the whole green peppers far a garnish.

peppers, when these are not to be had. Sopa. - Fry precisely as above a moderate-sized onion and a couple of green peppers, and two or three tomatoes in a little oil. When tender, add a plat of coid water and some salt, and when boiling throw in a state bread cut very thin, and serve at once.

This dish is extremely good without the Gaspacho. - This is as completely a national Spanish dish as the berza, and is partaken of daily in the hot weather, either for lunch or before going to bed Bruise in a mortar one or two cloves of garile with a little salt and some oil, may tablespoonful, and a piece of stale breadcrumb previously soaked in water. Mash these till perfectly smooth, then add a little water and work again, notil the mass blends with the water, then add more water gradually until the mortar is quite full. Tarn it into a bowl or tureen and add the full quantity of water required, also a sliced tomato, a green pepper shred thin, or a few thin alloss of cucumber. Leave this in a cool draught, covered, and break up a sufficient quantity of bread (not new). Add this to the soup five minutes before serving, and at the last add a dessert-spoonful of good vinegar, or more if required.

Fish with Saffron .- Pound in a mortar s clove, a little cinnamon, and a pinch of saffron, with a piece of woaked orumb of bread. Fry in oil a green pepper out up, a clove or two of garlie braised, and some finely-chopped paraley; add the spice and bread, and enough water and sait; let all boil until the bread has thickened the water, and then put in the pieces of fishof the same kind as in the preceding recipe.

Fish en Blanco.-Put into a stewpan some water (enough to cover the fisb), half a small cup of salad oil, two cloves of garile; or if preferred an onion sliced--and some chopped paraley. When boiling throw in the fish, draw to the side of fire, and simmer till done. Serve with the liquor; and at table squeese lemon over it. Do not omit sait. Whiting are particularly delicious done in this way; as also soles and other similar fish.

A Ponk butcher, be it respectfully observed, in so far in advance of the age, inasmuch as he both kills and cures. Now, it is rare indeed that a doctor can achieve more than one of these delicate operations successfully at a time; at all events, there is no living proof of the two having been performed completely to the patient's satisfaction.

Confidential Correspondents.

A. B. O.-Provost is in Sectiond the title of a mayor. The Provost of a Scotch city is called King.-It is no sin for a man to call himself a professor. Any man may do so who chooses; other people may believe him or not as they like.

MARY,-You had better take your violin to a maker of such instruments, and consult him about the worms in the wood, as you might injure the tone if you employed the ordinary methods MARTHA .- The Bloomer costume, consisting of a skirt falling a little below the knee and a furkish trousers, received its name from omer, an American lady, who was the first pair of Turkish trouse to wear it, in 1840. FLORENCE. -There is no rule; say whatever seems best adapted to the circumstances. 2. A young man who can set in such a manner is hardly worth thinking about. Bend him back his presents, Hors.-It is a rule, with but few exceptions, that the final "a" is any word should be drop-ped when the word takes the form of an adverb, and supplemented with the letters "iy." Thus you ould not subscribe yourself, "yours truely," AMY .- 1. Warm, or rather luke-warm water, is generally used by those desiring to prevent wrinkles appearing on the face, 2. The word "Eyre" in the novel "Jame Eyre" is pronounced 'air.'' 3. Your handwriting is very nest and

M. R. S.-Sliver coins can be cleaned with almost any of the prepared silver powders sold by shop-keepers. Copper, bronze, and nickle coins can be cleaned with a weak solution of vinegar Put the coins for ten minutes in the solution, let them dry, and rub them with a piece of dry chameis

S. R.-As we use the phrase "red letter day" it means a day worthy of remembrance, a day on which we have distinguished ourselves, a day to he recalled with delight. The origin of the eaving is founded on the fact that in almanace saints' days and holidays are printed in red to mark them distinctly from the other days, which are in black.

FANOIBR.-The mocking-bird, a native of South America, may be had, when young, for five doilars each, and the older for twelve and upwards, to twenty-five dollars. Sometimes, however, they are sold for fabulous prices. The speci of a swal-low's flight has been tested in Italy, two being selected for the purpose, and they showed a speed of eighty-seven and a half miles an hour.

AVERY. - Cocaine is an alkaloid extracted from the coca leaves. It has the power of paraly-sing the ends of sensory nerves, especially mucous membranes (as the inside of the mouth). All sensation is thus destroyed. It does not set so well in infamed mucous membranes or on the skin. What the dentist used was a hypodermic syringe, by which the cocaine was introduced between the gum and the QUERIST .- "Arbor Day" is a day in May, appointed by the different States as a holiday to be employed in the planting of trees. This sensible holiday was begun seventeen years ago in the State of Mebraska, and the example has been followed by thirty-four States. Each village munity and school joins in the planting along the roads, round buildings and schoolso that the country may again be covered with trees which the folly and ignorance of the earlier settlers had nearly exterminated.

Mrs. L. A. J.-This correspondent would like some lines published in THE POST, about the '80 sor '70's on the death of Major Andre. Perhaps '80 sor '70's on the death of Major Andre. Perhaps '80 sor '70's on the death of Major Andre. some of our readers may be able to inform her and us of the exact or at least a date close to their appearance. The following are the only lines she can INQUIRER -An etching is a species of engraving produced from a copper plate on which the artist has sketched or drawn his design. The process of etching is essentially different from line engraving, where the picture is generally cut into etching, the plate, which may be either copper or sine, is first covered with a coating of wax and etching, the plate, which may be either some other ingredients, and the pisture is drawn by the artist on this coating with an etching needle. Each line drawn with the needle uncovers the wary coating. When the drawing is finished, the plate is lines of the plate where it is not protected by the coating of wax. Before the engraving of the is accomplished, many parts have to be put it acid several times to attain the desired effect.

The lilac shall bud, sweet hawthorn shall blos

Old Severn shall roll his glad tides to the shore, But Andre will lay with a clod on his bosom, And dream of battle fields no more.

AJAX .- We adhere to the opinion that thirty years of age is quite soon enough for a man to marry. Those who urge difficulties based on the supposed necessity of settlement at an earlier period habits which are entirely subservient to the will. It is not only perfectly possible, but expedient, for every man to devote the first years of adolescence to the training of his nature and character. Early marriages are the curse of society. They are pro-ducing consequences which eat into the root of society and destroy the sanctity of the married state. A multitude of families are ruined every year by the consequences of this evil. The Divorce Coart is simply as some little weather-coak showing which way the wind blows. Not a thousandth part of the mass of miscrable endings to early marriages see the light. Lives are embittered, and men and women drag out a weary existence, because, having bound themselves together on the impulse of the moment or of the epoch of life, they cannot, may not forsooth, be separated without a public exposure, demorali-ing in its nature and reinous in its effects. Let the young wait with what patience they may; let them understand that it is the duty of men to live bonofable and pure lives, practising that self-control which the future will assuredly require of them at the price of personal happiness, and iet them avoid early marriages as they would a sunre. Make a home first; then, when the way in life is chosen, the path laid out, and the future fairly well assured, it will be time enough to think of secting. And these con-ditions will searcely be eatleded until the age of